Introduction

As you talk and communicate with others, you may feel an invisible energy running through your interactions. You feel it when you interact with negative friends and become negative afterward. You feel it when you interact with happy and enthusiastic friends and absorb their motivation. It's like their emotions are contagious. Yet, this is much more than a psychological phenomenon; it's an often ignored exchange of energies that takes place in each communication. It can be influenced and controlled.

This is not a straightforward scientific fact. Indeed this energy is ignored, or even denied, by the vast majority of the population, yet for a minority of successful people, it's firmly established as a reality and something used to their own advantage. The beauty of it is that you don't need to believe it in order to benefit from it. All you need is to understand the principles, practice the exercises, and you'll be able to reap the benefits whether you believe it or not.

Using this energy to forward your own influence is called Personal Magnetism, or Charisma, and it was studied by many authors in the early XX century and late 1800's. Edmund Shaftesbury, a popular personal magnetism author, defines personal magnetism as “an art by which a person is enabled to control those within reach of his voice, eye or touch” (Shaftesbury, 1888). On the same note, William Walker Atkinson (using his pseudonym of Theron Q. Dumont), defined it as: “the strong, peculiar, but little understood power, force or influence, exerted by certain individuals, in varying degrees, by the means of which other persons are attracted to, controlled by, dominated, or influenced by the individual possessing the power; a form of mental influence exerted by certain individuals over those with whom they come in contact with.” (Dumont, 1913).

By reading this book you can attain a better understanding of how to create and generate this personal magnetism and charisma. In the first part of this book you can understand its definition, what it is exactly, its attributes and how it works.

In the second part of the book you are introduced to the Four Pillars of Charisma: what you need to have in order to develop it.

The disbelief in the possibility of acquiring charisma and personal magnetism has prevented many of us from considering it a subject worthy of study, development and training. Nonetheless, there are many popular men and women who possess this gift with a highly developed degree of intuitive understanding. Their multi leveled success proves this as a real gift.

It has been surprising to discover throughout the interviews and analysis we have done with over 200 charismatic men and women, that every single one of them acknowledged their spark and influence was acquired and not something they were born with. They mentioned how they had to work for it and, in many cases, how hard it was. It seemed that there wasn't a roadmap to get there. Each of them developed their magnetism in their own unique ways based on personal strengths and weaknesses. Nonetheless there seems to be a set of teachings that consistently created charismatic and magnetic men. These were not easily accessible and were found buried between layers of useless information and disinformation. Hence, a working method was created to fit our everyday modern lives and needs.

This is not a practice book, nor a full training. It's not the right medium for it. The development of personal magnetism is very hard to accomplish without a qualified teacher guiding you along and correcting the problems that inevitably show up. The goal of this book is to introduce you to a way of developing charisma, to allow you to glimpse the possibility of actually transforming yourself into a magnetic man or woman capable of influencing those around you.

Chapter 1 - What is Charisma?

Charisma, as a personal quality, is often surrounded by a certain aura of mystery. It's hard to define, since, unlike other traits, it doesn't have a concrete form neither specific behavioral definitions.

We can define what honesty is. Truthfulness, sincerity, frankness, integrity, among other characteristics. An honest person is honorable in his/her principles, intentions and actions; he/she is upright and fair. But how can you define charisma and a charismatic person?

If we ask 100 psychologists, academics or sociologists, the definition would always be different. It'll also depend on the background of the person giving it. A psychologist will, most likely, give a different definition than a sociologist.

To keep things clear, in this book, we're not going to discuss charisma in the sociological way which focuses mostly on the charismatic authority concept. We're not even discussing charisma using psychological constructs which focus mostly on the behavior of a charismatic person. This book's goal is to define and think about charisma in a way that can be useful for you and me; the everyday man or woman who wants to improve his/her life.

Here are four definitions of charisma from different dictionaries:

“A spiritual power or personal quality that gives an individual influence or authority over large numbers of people.”

“A rare personal quality attributed to leaders who arouse fervent popular devotion and enthusiasm.”

“A personal attractiveness or interestingness that enables you to influence others.”

“Extraordinary power and appeal of personality; natural ability to inspire a large following.”

A power, a personal quality or a natural ability; this is the definition of charisma taken from the dictionary. You can recognize those who have it, but you can't say exactly what it is. You can only state that it's a rare personal quality or appeal of personality.

Maybe some will deny the “spiritual quality” or “extraordinary power” because they don't believe in it. That's their belief. The fact no one can deny is the existence of an unexplained quality which, in certain people, is viewed as attractive.

Often times it is better to define something by saying what it's not. Especially with such an elusive concept as charisma, it's particularly important to clear some misunderstandings surrounding it.

a) It's not a physical or genetic trait

Some authors defend charisma as a physical or genetic trait, like the height or eye color, physical attractiveness, in the sense that we need to be born with it. We disagree.

We consider charisma a personal quality or even a spiritual quality, and as such, it can be developed. If we think about it: a thief can become honest, and an honest man can become a thief. There are also many cases of people who were never spiritual before, yet they developed their own spiritual qualities later in life, through practices of spiritual disciplines like Yoga, Tai-Chi and similar doctrines. We place charisma in this category. Since it's a personal quality and a spiritual quality, it can be developed with the right intention, the right effort and the right tools.

b) It doesn't exist by itself

Another fact about charisma is that it doesn't exist by itself. Unlike physical traits, charisma only manifests itself in the presence of others. In other words, although it's something inherent to us, we can't tell if we have it when we're isolated. We need to stay grounded in society, because only within the interactions of our daily life can we see if we're being successful or not.

A common question among Charisma School students, once they notice the energetic nature of our methods and they start getting their first successes, is: "Should I spend more time doing exercises at home?" The answer is always the same: some exercises at home are always necessary, but above all, everything must be tested and practiced in your daily life, in the interactions with your coworkers, friends, family and strangers. Charisma or Personal Magnetism manifests through interactions with others and must always be developed within these interactions.

c) It's not an external trait

In most charisma development books and training programs you are able to read countless advice on how to improve your body language, to have an open posture, to be clear in your speech and similar such information.

This kind of advice is, of course, important to follow. No one can deny the fact that smiling more, being clear in your speech, and having a good body language influences your empathy with others around you. Yet, does it really generate this "spiritual quality" or "extraordinary power" we define as charisma? Hardly. Why is that? Simply put, because it only focus on the external aspects of charisma. But, as we've seen from our definition, charisma is something that you radiate from the inside out. Not the other way around. That's why the normal charisma training programs you find in typical corporate environments only train the superficial aspect and never the underlying cause.

In Charisma School, we tend to use the term "charisma" related to "Personal Magnetism"; exactly the way those few dictionary definitions mentioned. This perfectly describes our framework. We believe it's a personal quality, a spiritual quality, a personal attractiveness that attracts others to you and not a specific set of behaviors you must adopt.

d) It's not extroversion

There is a common belief in which charismatic people are defined as extroverted, often as comedians or entertainers. Although extroverted people can be charismatic, introverted people also have the same opportunities to become charismatic. You don't need to develop extroversion or be naturally outgoing in order to cultivate your charisma. Throughout history there have been plenty of examples of strong charismatic leaders who were far from outgoing. But they had a powerful and strong presence nonetheless.

e) You don't have to be born with it

Charisma is often described as something that you are either born with or not, that you will never acquire it. That's a completely wrong belief and has prevented many people in the past from becoming charismatic.

The reason this belief exists is precisely because of all the other ineffective advice you read in books that only focus on developing external aspects of the personality instead of focusing on the real core. In fact, nobody becomes charismatic only with external changes. We develop our own internal states in such a way that we become magnetic. Even if you don't consider yourself charismatic, you can think of a time when you were in a charismatic state, and, as such, people were drawn to you. It could have been a particular situation, and right afterward you lost that charismatic feeling, but you had it for a moment or an event. Or at least most people, even if they don't have "everyday charisma", have had such moments or events happen to them. It had nothing to do with external body language, and smiling more. I'm sure you weren't even conscious of any of that while you were in this charismatic state. It was related with your internal state. This proves that everyone can have a charismatic state. Now it's just a matter of increasing the time length, its power and being able to summon it at will.

Now you ask me:

And I'll tell you: yes there is. In fact, there are many more than just one. I share a few in this book and many others in the Charisma School Training Courses. They are very different and more efficient than the usual tips on body language, or smiling more, or being nice to people. We go to the subtle energetic flow. But these techniques are only helpful within the context of the whole training. Should it happen that find yourself being able to use them outside of this structured learning method, you're merely summoning the state without actually knowing why.

So in Charisma School we take the high road. We don't just give you a few techniques or tips to get you in the state. Our mission in this school is to help you unleash your natural charisma that is buried under layers of unhelpful personality traits, years of sabotaging your own inner power, unconscious and energetic blocks, and inefficient relationships with others and yourself. So instead of merely developing a charismatic state, we develop a charismatic and magnetic personality. It's hard work, but how good will it feel when you're simply a charismatic person who can naturally attract people around you? No techniques, no methods, just simply being charismatic and magnetic.

Personal Magnetism Vs Charisma

Over the course of this book you will often read both concepts: personal magnetism and charisma. Before we move any further, it's important to distinguish them.

Personal magnetism refers to the existence of a personal power, influence, or atmosphere, possessed by certain individuals, which enables them to attract, influence or have an impact upon others. These individuals are aglow with vigorous energy and tension and radiate this energy with health and vitality in a way that is perceptible to all those who meet them or are even in the same room as them.

As opposed to that, those who lack personal magnetism and tension energy, don't display any of those traits, and, in an extreme way, can be considered vampires, since they drain those who come in to contact with them. I'm sure you can relate to this. Just remember a time when you were with someone and afterward you felt depressed, angry or negative in some way.

Charisma, according to our definition, is a bigger and broader concept than personal magnetism. It's more of a spiritual and personal quality than just the ability to influence or attract. While it encompasses personal magnetism, its range is far greater. Not only can we define charisma as a personal and spiritual quality, an appeal of personality that attracts others to you through a powerful energy you exude from yourself, it can also be described as an inner power that allows you to control your own mind, energy and body. It's the expression of a healthy, happy and powerful person.

In short, with charisma, we have an expression of personal magnetism and a deep inner power that allows you to be everything that you want and can be.

Are there charismatic people who don't have this inner power? Of course. Society is filled with individuals who are charismatic in the normal everyday sense of the word, yet, their inner power leaves much to be desired. But that's not what we advocate in Charisma School. Although it's possible to achieve a charismatic state developing only the magnetic energy without inner power, it won't be a long lasting charisma nor will it develop your full potential. It's a charisma created upon quicksand, you'll be buried as success is achieved. The entertainment business is filled with examples like this. A natural charismatic person is brought into great heights, success and fame, only to have a hard downfall ultimately caused by themselves, with the most extreme cases ending in suicide, and the less extreme in the development of physical and psychological distress.

Chapter 2 – The 12 Charismatic Attributes

Observations done together with over 200 charismatic individuals in all walks of life over a period of 8 years has allowed us to distinguish 12 attributes they possess in bigger or lesser degree. These 12 attributes are not present in the same level in all charismatic individuals, although they must possess at least 6 of these 12 to be called charismatic.

At the time of the present writing there's isn't a scale that can accurately measure - or even identify - charisma. There's only a subjective feeling, that the person either has or hasn't got it. It's called the "it factor" because no one can actually define it.

The 12 attributes are the result of a lengthy observation process. We focused on external attributes, those that can be observed, and constructed our own scale to measure the traits of these charismatic people.

We divided these 12 attributes into 3 different categories: Social, Personal and Energetic.

Social: Influence/Fascination, Communication, "Mind Reading", Inspiration.

Personal: Presence, Enigma, Inner Power, Conviction/Purpose.

Energetic: Vitality, Large & Bright "Aura", Sexual Magnetism, Turnaround Effect.

Social Attributes

These are the attributes that can be seen in the relationships charismatic people have with other people. How exactly do charismatic individuals differentiate themselves as to how they relate to others?

- Influence/Fascination: when most people think of a charismatic individual, they usually recall someone with a great power of influence. This is one of the main attributes of charisma. A charismatic individual is able to influence and have an impact on those around him, through his/her powerful communication and projection skills.
Sometimes, this power is so great that's it's beyond influence. It's a state of fascination and allure that makes others do things they never thought they would do. Such is the case of several fascist and cult leaders.
- Communication: The communication ability of a charismatic person is excellent. This person can quickly establish rapport with anyone and adjust his communication style to those he is communicating with. He/she can put you at ease or give you the chills just by using their gaze or by saying a couple of words. In their communication they can use several tools like gaze, voice, touch, personal space and so on. We call these "Sources of Personal Magnetism" and will be discussed in a later chapter.
- "Mind Reading": It's not as if charismatic individuals can really read your mind. But it's like they can. When speaking with charismatic individuals, it seems they can connect deeply with those to whom they speak. Even though he/she can be talking to a crowd of thousands, it's like he/she is talking directly to you. Their social sensitivity is off the charts and can express in words what you are merely thinking of. It's like they are able to know other people's state of mind, whether through reading body language, through reading their energy, or simply using intuition.
There are many methods and techniques to develop this attribute, but even if you deeply study body language and psychology to know what the other person might be thinking, you still need to be able to communicate it in a way that reaches out to the other person in order to have this charismatic attribute.

- Inspiration: A charismatic individual brings out something in others. He makes them feel strong emotions. It brings out a deeper part of them. This attribute can be used to bring out the best in others and generate a deep self-confidence and inner power. But it's often also used to let others relate to a particular cause or ideal and lose their own identity in the ideal of the charismatic leader.

Personal Attributes

These are the attributes that can be seen in the psychology and in the way the charismatic person carries himself:

- Presence: A charismatic individual has a strong and commanding presence. He can be a leader anywhere he goes and directs the attention of everyone around him. This is heavily rooted in being present as well as in projecting his own energy into the situations. If he is talking to you, he is talking with all his attention on you. It's the antithesis of being distracted, preoccupied or anxious. He is not easily swayed or pushed around. He stands his ground.
- Enigma: You can't pinpoint or truly get to know a charismatic individual. It's like there's always other facets to that person that remain hidden. Although this can be said about anyone, not everyone can maintain this "aura of enigma and mystery" through which there always seems to be something left unsaid and a desire to know more.
- Inner Power: Although this doesn't always happen, a charismatic individual has a spiritual or personal quality grants a high degree of self-confidence, self-esteem, assertiveness and gives that extra edge on how he looks and behaves in the world. It's his own internal compass and source of strength. It's not based on his wealth, accomplishments or good looks. It's an internal source of energy and strength, one that survives through all the hardships and setbacks of life and allows him to constantly have this sense of internal power. In the Charismatic Attributes, we connect Will to this internal power, although internally these two are divided, in our observation they are as one. A strong Will is the corner stone of a charismatic individual. Will has an intimate connection with the core of his being. It enables this individual to decide what needs to be done, apply the necessary means for realization and persist in the task in the face of all obstacles and difficulties.

- Conviction and/or Purpose: Charismatic individuals are well connected to their sense of passion or purpose, even if they don't have one and fully live in the moment. In many individuals this sense of purpose is what fuels their charisma. When it fails, for some reason, their charisma also fails. We, in Charisma School, warn students against this. It's good to have a sense of purpose and use this to fuel charisma and personal magnetism, as long as inner power is still well developed. In other words, without this sense of purpose would you still be able to maintain your inner power and conviction? Is your personality and vitality affected solely by this purpose? It's important to be aware of its importance, use it as much as possible, but understand it's true role.

Energetic Attributes

These are the attributes that can be observed in the charismatic/energetic body.

- Vitality: Vitality differs from outside looks or external appearances. It's also not related to how strong you are, although it can definitely influence it. It's the quantity and quality of your own internal energy. As you develop and fine tune this magnetic energy, it also increases the quality of your daily life. Vitality automatically produces a good capacity for effort in someone, it's like you can do more and achieve more. There's more available energy to spend as you see fit. Sometimes this vitality is fueled by convictions or passion; other times, it's the energetic make up that generates it.
- Large & Bright “Aura”: The energetic blueprint of a charismatic individual is typically bright and big. It's luminous and stands out. It's like he's always reaching out to others; his personal space encompasses everyone around him. That's why a charismatic individual stands out in a way no one can describe. This gives him/her the “larger than life” kind of effect.
- Sexual Magnetism: Although it doesn't happen with all charismatic individuals, some individuals develop sexual magnetism to a high degree. This has the consequence of sexually attracting others. It creates a sexual aura that seems to elicit sexual feelings in others and draw them to the charismatic person. Many sexually magnetic individuals were born this way, others were made. This sexual magnetism can be generated through energetic, social or psychological means. More details on this topic can be found in a later chapter.
- Turnaround Effect: Once a charismatic individual enters a room, those already in the room seem to sense his/her presence and turnaround to look his/her way. This is a measurable observation that some charismatic individuals seem to have. It doesn't happen every single time but it happens if the energies are at their peak.

Chapter 3 – The Discovery of the Secret of Charisma

Nearly 40 years ago our main teacher, Fabricio Astelo, met an old man in Italy, a well-travelled painter who also worked in a rural community. He had something that you couldn't quite put your finger on; an aura of mystery surrounded him, an immense charisma and the most intense eyes you've ever seen. It seemed like everyone just wanted to talk to him and be near him. Yet, he was just a modest man from a rural Italian village. Not particularly sophisticated, well-spoken or handsome. But there was more to this man than met the eye, although he didn't reveal his story and his knowledge to anyone.

Through a stroke of luck, Fabricio, still young at that time, fell into the good graces of this old man and became one of his few personal students. He discovered that this old man was a master of several mystical and esoteric teachings. He was a practitioner in the true sense of the word. Yet, he was an unknown practitioner by choice, one that didn't care for fame, money or worldly rewards. He only cared about being left alone so he could proceed with his own personal development. Over the next 20 years, abundant knowledge regarding all matters related to energy, consciousness, gaze and inner power was transmitted between the two, as well as other with masters he came to know.

The Roots of this Knowledge

We quickly discovered that this knowledge had some roots in the ancient teachings of Hermeticism which is a set of philosophical and religious beliefs that shaped western esoteric thought. The figure of Hermes was venerated as a great and mythical teacher in the ancient world and was rediscovered by the finest minds of the Renaissance. This figure influenced personalities like Leonardo Da Vinci, Shakespeare, Newton, Blake among many others.

From an old notebook, we found that an old master of these hermetic teachings travelled to India, Tibet and Nepal and learned how to expand this inner power even further using the techniques he discovered, and so eastern teachings were added to the best of western knowledge. As such, the knowledge became even more eclectic and influential than it had been before. It seems that this system has been refined over the centuries by a select few individuals. Books weren't published about it, and few writings are available. The knowledge is scattered among Hermetic writings, the French mesmeric hypnosis tradition, Tibetan meditation systems, Indian yogic teachings and even in the American New Thought movement where they grab the best of the French gaze tradition and the hermetic knowledge.

It never reached mainstream knowledge the way other mystical traditions did. Why did this happen this way and why didn't the knowledge become more popular? Although we can never be sure, we assume that with the fall of esotericism in the late XVIII century, individuals didn't want to be seen as associated with these kind of energetic practices not based on measurable scientific phenomena.

The New Thought movement

The appearance of the New Thought movement in the beginning of the XIX century brought back many of the roots of this knowledge to the public eye. The New Thought was a philosophical thinking which consisted in the belief in a Higher Power (call it God or Universal Intelligence) and its divine manifestation in all of us. The practitioners also believed in the power of mind over body, and as such, in the ability of our mind to heal our physical body. It's a mental and spiritual system that holds man as being one with God, through the power of constructive thinking.

New Thought was deeply associated with Self-help. Mostly with the teachings of controlling your thoughts and how your thoughts create reality. The popular book of "The Secret" is nothing more than New Thought teachings presented in a modern (and incomplete) way. Above all, this New Thought Mind Science has its roots in ancient mysticism and Hermeticism.

Several authors you might recognize are: Napoleon Hill, William Walter Atkinson, Edmund Shaftesbury, Charles Haanel and Thomas Troward.

There's also a tradition in which a minority of the authors of the New Thought Movement studied and wrote about Will Power, Personal Magnetism, Concentration, Energy, among other Personal Power characteristics. They used some New Thought Mind Science tools, as well as techniques from other disciplines, in order to increase the Power and Magnetism of the individual. They studied the mental and spiritual aspect of maximum achievement in life.

The problem with these teachings was always lack of structure and integration. If you have read some of their books, read their techniques and tried to apply them, you will have found that it's quite hard to get some objective results from them without the proper road map. Just one technique alone means little if not inserted within a bigger training context. Not to mention certain techniques that are, simply put, impossible to accomplish without previous preparation and understanding.

The True Purpose of Charisma School

The early teachers who taught the founders of Charisma School were contemporaries of these New Thought authors, and from our records, we know they even met some of them. But, unlike them, our early teachers always preferred to remain anonymous in this quest. For this reason, they didn't write any books and all the knowledge was passed on by oral tradition only.

Due to their knowledge in other areas like the French Magnetic Tradition, Hermeticism, Indian Yoga and Psychology, they explored much further than the original New Thought authors and integrated all these teachings into a coherent whole with the proper preparations which could increase magnetism and personal power step by step.

They believed – as do I – that the development of charisma, personal magnetism and mind control was a key to success and fulfilment in life.

The goal of Charisma School is to continue their legacy and share the knowledge they left behind in an open way so more people can benefit from it. We are currently the only school that integrates the teachings of personal power and magnetism into a complete system that can be followed by anyone to achieve his/her maximum potential in life.

We believe this is the right time to bring these teachings into worldly light. They are valuable and have the potential to be extremely useful in our day-to-day world where inner power is a lost concept, and with the growth of consumerism and capitalism we become weaker every day, being enslaved by banks, governments and marketing agencies. We seem to need everything and everyone to be happy and fulfilled. We go full out against this way of thinking and offer an alternative way of thinking, a way that empowers the individual, and does not enslave him.

At Charisma School we propose that by using certain tools, knowledge and a path, anyone can reach a permanent state of Charisma and achieve their full potential. And by that, we mean that this person, this individual, has a higher likelihood to achieve more in his or her life, to achieve all his goals and fully realize himself. It's undeniable that someone can achieve a richer life if he/she has a high degree of confidence, assertiveness, Will, concentration, mind control, with the ability to have magnetic interactions and actually do the things that he/she wants to do without procrastination, anxiety, and other inner disturbances. He will also be able to achieve genuine connections to the people around him, setting an example to everyone and be an overall inspiration in society with his/her flawless values and principles.

But that's not the only goal of achieving inner power. The objective is also to expand your consciousness, to have a perfect awareness of yourself and your own mind. Using our tools, techniques and knowledge, you'll be able to expand your physical, mental, emotional, relational and spiritual dimensions to access a dynamic power that will enable you to master, direct and use your own energies, mind and physical body to whatever purpose you desire.

These are techniques based on the expansion of your Will, control of your mind and growth of your inner and outer world as well as the development of your body and energy. What distinguishes Charisma School from other schools and knowledge frameworks is the use of these techniques not only to expand our inner world, but also to explore the relation with the outer world in a way that our inner power outwardly manifests itself through charisma, allowing one to achieve worldly goals and have a fulfilling existence.

Chapter 4 - The Power of Thoughts and Mental Currents

Inner power and mental development are one of the cornerstones of charisma and personal magnetism according to our method. But why? Working with aspects such as voice, posture and body language should be the obvious approach to charisma since they provide external changes anyone can observe, whilst to the naked eye inner power, energy or any kind of internal work are effectively invisible.

I must be honest. When I started my own development, I didn't think about any of these factors nor did I do any kind of critical analysis. I just started the training due to feeling a strong influence from Fabricio and wanting to just have a part of it for myself. Only later did I discover several authors which offered explanations for this phenomenon, mainly in the American New Thought and French Personal Magnetism movements.

In general, these authors explain personal magnetism as a “mental vigor” (Jagot, 1960) or “mental strength” which can be defined as being the vitality of your own thoughts, the power of your Will and the rising power of desires and extreme aversions. It stands for a rich, colorful and positive inner life, filled with inner power to be able to handle all the challenges of life. This “mental vigor” is transmitted to others through magnetic waves.

One French author, Victor Turnbull (1900), explains the human being as a battery accumulator constantly receiving and discharging energy. It emits currents of repulsion and attraction. Often times, these currents are conscious (similar to when you want to impress your friends), other times they are unconscious (when you cause a favorable or unfavorable first impression). This way, you are constantly acting upon others, either using your Will or not. Thus, we find that there's a force or energy in action. This is not just the force of conscious thought since, on many occasions, it can be manifested without any kind of thinking. It was called magnetism. It could have easily been called mental currents, but the older authors decided on magnetism, influenced by the Mesmer experiments.

Turnbull mentions mental currents being transmitted from one person to another as a continuous event in any interaction. We are all influenced by this; some of us feel this influence, while others don't. When going through your bank of past experiences, I'm sure you can remember some particular encounters which strongly demonstrated this principle for you. Most likely you have been swayed or fascinated by a particular individual, whether positively or negatively; an encounter after which you were left feeling great or terrible. Although most interactions aren't this impactful, they always leave their mark due to the exchange of energies between people's personal energy fields.

Additionally, mental currents also affect your surrounding space, which Atkinson defines as the personal atmosphere: "Every person generates and throws off a certain degree (varying among different individuals) of personal magnetism, which affects the minds of other persons coming within the field of its influence. Not only does each person emanate and project a certain amount or degree of personal magnetism, additionally each person is also constantly surrounded by a field of personal magnetic influence - a personal atmosphere, so to speak. This personal atmosphere affects to a greater or lesser degree other persons coming within its field of influence." (Dumont, 1913).

The strong magnetic individuals, "who are generally recognized as leaders of the race", usually have a personal atmosphere that extends to great distances from the person and is "fairly saturated with strong dynamic magnetism, which impresses itself strongly upon those coming within their field of influence" (Dumont, 1913). The goal of the magnetic individual is to always be the one with the stronger energy, so he is the one doing the influencing and not being influenced.

The thought aspect of personal magnetism is defended mostly by Durville and Mulford. Durville says: "Thoughts and actions of the same nature are attracted to each other and give birth, or increase, the consideration, sympathy or love which individuals are prone to feel for one another. Opposite thoughts and actions repel themselves and generate distrust and hate.” (Durville, 1921).

According to this theory, our thoughts can be considered material bodies ruled by laws, or, as Prentice Mulford established: “Thoughts are things” (Mulford, 1887). Any thought which occurs in our mind, vibrates our mental apparatus, and its vibrations spread all over our body in the same way as a stone thrown into a quiet lake. If it’s an intense thought, the quantity of mental energy increases, expands to our personal atmosphere and attracts other similar thought energy from our surroundings, as long as it’s within the same quality of energy. Strong, intense thoughts about peace and joy, frequently attract compassion and love. Strong, intense hateful thoughts frequently attract anger and violence. Hence, this personal atmosphere is fed by our own thoughts in a self-reinforced loop attracting and repelling other types of thought energy. Therefore, the thoughts can communicate and transform in a mutual kind of way in a continuous movement from one individual to another, without conscious awareness. If they are of the same nature, they have a certain affinity between them (“misery loves company”).

You may associate what you are reading in this chapter to the well-known movement of “manifestation” started by the book “The Secret”, in which our thoughts create our reality, so by thinking positively you attract all sorts of good circumstances to your life. While the basic principle is the same, especially considering “The Secret” was based on the same New Thought philosophy this chapter is discussing, the general workings are substantially different.

When authors like Durville, Mulford, Turnbull and Atkinson write about thought, they are not referring only to the verbal contents of our mind, or even some simple visualization we may create. They are referring to the whole mental plane of men, which encompasses the contents of mind but also of the whole psyche. The thought must permeate your whole being with its vibration; hence, if you are thinking positive thoughts but they are not resonating within the depths of your being, you aren’t attracting any kind of positive circumstances. You continue attracting the same events into your life, since you haven’t truly changed the inner vibration and your own personal atmosphere. A deeper transformation must happen for a true change of your personal magnetism and personal atmosphere. How to achieve this deeper transformation is what Charisma School is all about.

Chapter 5 – The Four Pillars of Charisma

We created a structure for charisma development called the “Four Pillars of Charisma”. They stand as being: Inner Power, Will, Energy and Projection.

These pillars weren’t randomly chosen. They were developed over 8 years of research and experimentation with over 200 charismatic individuals, as well as experimentation with different techniques and concepts.

Additionally, these pillars weren’t taken solely from ancient teachings. Many techniques and concepts were dropped since they no longer apply to modern society and the modern man. They were no longer effective in developing magnetism. Others were added to fit our modern needs.

This isn’t just something we decided to do because we wanted to. By sharing my own personal experience you can understand why we were required to add more techniques and concepts: when I started my magnetic development with traditional teachings, my self-confidence levels were low, as many teenagers in today’s world. What I was told to do by the old master was: “You need to be confident, you need to believe in yourself. You need to become like a little Napoleon”. As good and true as this advice may be, I’m sure you understand that it doesn’t quite help a shy and weak teenager in getting his confidence levels up. There is no practical advice or precise method to follow, just an abstraction. It took me many years to understand where he was coming from.

The need for a modern structure of Personal Magnetism and Charisma

The Charisma School's early masters were true "Renaissance men" and polymaths. You can picture them as accomplished painters, sculptors, writers, world travelers, public performers and so on. If you need a model, think Leonardo da Vinci. They studied different subjects and practiced different arts. Most of them were hungry for knowledge and loved their arts. Just imagine the kind of synapses they created inside their brains with the development of both left and right brain hemispheres by painting or playing the violin and by studying mathematics, philosophy and so on.

Their brain was already trained to a highly developed degree. Just imagine the kind of Will one must have to develop all these arts and sciences. You end up developing a great Will and inner power just by learning so many different subjects and becoming an accomplished artist and scientist. Their lives were filled with moving energy, an active mindset, and even in their normal routines they stood out from most people. They were, in fact, different even though they seemed the same.

As you are aware, these past Charisma School masters came from a very different background than most of us. Most of them were men with a lot of different fields of mastery, with a well-developed Will and inner power, who, among their travels, or knowledge seeking, happened to learn the teachings of energy, personal magnetism and meditation and with that they increased their inner and outer power tenfold.

These "Renaissance men" knew about the importance of influencing others, in fact, they needed it to support their activities. They needed sponsors so that they could continue to learn, experiment and pursue their endeavors. Yet, getting these sponsors was a matter of influence. Hence, in the beginning, it was a matter of learning personal magnetism and charisma for financial stability. So their inner development of mind was accompanied by the outer development of influencing, which became inner and outer power or in our understanding: charisma or personal magnetism.

Compare their mindset to our own daily lives now in the modern world. We may have considerably more technology, better living conditions, more opportunities to learn many things but we're far from having the same kind of mind power.

Let's face it, anyone can learn whatever they want these days without seeking long for a teacher or having to travel to distant lands. If you want to learn to paint, you can find classes around the corner. Anywhere you go, you have this amazing knowledge tool, the internet, which allows you to know everything you want. Our jobs are far more specialized than ever, with new knowledge coming out on a daily basis. And, although it's normal to have some artistic endeavor, it's relegated as something we do for fun as a hobby, and rarely a mastery practice that we pour our will and full power into. There are so many things that are catching our attention that we just can't have time and energy for everything. So although we have access to all this knowledge, all this technology and have far superior living conditions, our inner power and even our brains are much less developed than these Charisma School men from the past. Our brains are mostly conditioned to a few types of intelligence. Even our memory and attention span is being affected negatively by these new technologies (Carr, 2011).

We no longer have the constant challenges and different sensory inputs these masters had in the past. Most of our lives are pretty much the same every day with a few modifications here and there, there's barely anything truly new and truly challenging.

When the early Charisma School masters wanted to teach these magnetism and charisma skills to others, they found themselves confronted with many failed attempts. They were only teaching the same kind of exercises they learned and used. But now they didn't work. How could they? For them, just a few energetic and Will exercises were more than enough to develop their inner and outer power. With that kind of developed brain and personal communication, they certainly didn't need much. These early Charisma School masters already had many of the foundations they took for granted, like Will power, attention control, powerful concentration, overall good self-confidence levels, different brain functioning, active mindset and different sensory modalities, among others. But their early students were mostly simple people from their communities and didn't have the same kind of advanced mindset the masters had. So they needed to adapt their early teachings. Not only did they need the same exercises, more was needed if they were ever going to pass on their knowledge. So a whole structure of personal magnetism teachings and charisma was born. With a set of skills, techniques and methods which not only allowed one to become an influential person in a community and surrounding people, but also developed one's inner world, it transformed the individual, providing a full control over oneself.

This is also the true reason why Charisma School was created. Let's face it, none of us have the time or mental energy to dedicate ourselves to several different pursuits and still hold a job or a career and have a family and social life. But in order to develop the same magnetism we need the similar mental, social and personal challenges that the arts and sciences bring us. We need similar or better brain development. We need the same social development. We need the same gaze development. Only in this way can we develop the same personal magnetism and charisma as the old masters.

That's why Charisma School created different kinds of training in order to develop Will, inner power, brain power, sensory expansion and sexual energy. Each of these courses, like the Magnetic Gaze, The 10 Steps to Inner Power and Sexual Magnetism, all have especially developed challenges that increase some aspect of inner or outer power in a big way to transform anyone into a charismatic and magnetic individual.

Enter the Four Pillars of Charisma

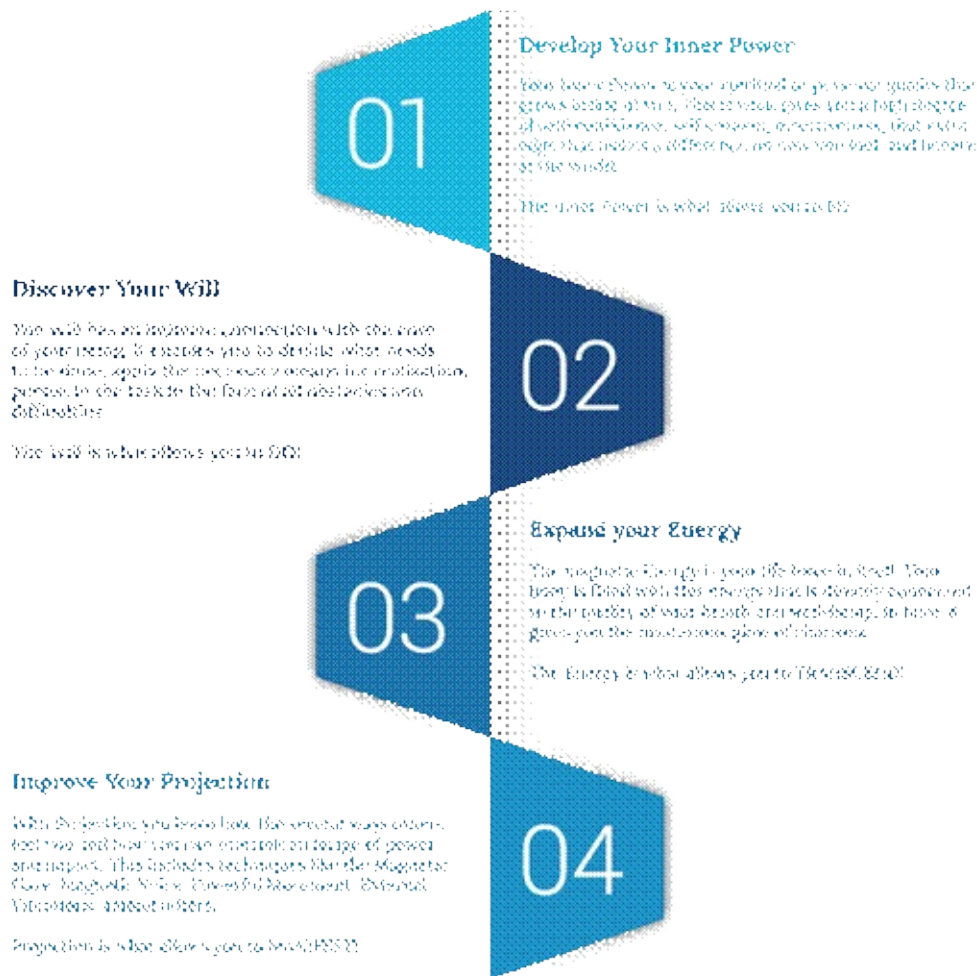

Although the 4 Pillars weren't structured this way by the older masters, since their system was much simpler, they were developed with the modern man in mind and not the "Renaissance man". Instead of having to learn different kinds of arts and sciences, you can achieve the same kind of brain, Will and inner power development with easier exercises and in far less time. If you have enough free time, feel free to pursue the old practices of becoming a polymath and only learning a few necessary practices for magnetism.

As for the rest of us, it's much more efficient and effective to take the route of developing the Four Pillars of Charisma. The 12 Charismatic Attributes we discussed in Chapter 2 are all derived from one of these pillars or a combination of some of them.

The Four Pillars of Charisma is a holistic framework. It can't be explained by the constituent parts alone, only by the whole. We understand charisma as the sum of all four pillars. The more developed you are in all pillars, the more charisma will shine through you.

Most students have one pillar more developed and three of them severely underdeveloped. Which means their charisma is weak. Some students have one pillar highly developed and at least another one in moderate levels, this way, their charisma can be strong, but it's unbalanced. When they live primarily in one pillar, they notice their life being chaotic and unstable.

Here's an illustration of the Four Pillars of Charisma:

1) The First Pillar is called “Inner Power” and it’s goal is to integrate mind, body and spirit into a functional whole and develop a “spiritual quality” inside of you. In our materialistic society we often ignore the importance of our emotions and inner world, leaving a lot of past scars unhealed. These scars are marks upon our spirit (sometimes only at a subconscious and/or energetic level) which create a lot of barriers in ourselves. When you are full of these blocks, your charisma suffers.

The negative emotions and negative thoughts create a magnetism which often sends people away from you instead of bringing them closer. We call this a “negative personal magnetism”, since it repels. As opposed to a “positive personal magnetism” which attracts others to you.

All the thoughts you have generate an imprint on your energetic field. Depending on the quality of your thoughts, your magnetism will be different. William Walker Atkinson (using his pseudonym Theron Q. Dumont) described it this way:

“It is a fact known to all students of the subject that the character of the mental atmosphere of any individual depends entirely upon the character of the mental states held by him. The mental atmosphere of the hopeful, expectant individual is composed of vibrations of a hopeful, cheerful character, which tend to impress and affect other persons coming within the field of activity of his personal atmosphere. Likewise, the mental atmosphere of the gloomy, depressed individual is composed of vibrations of a gloomy, depressing character, which impresses and affects individuals coming in contact therewith. And, in the same manner, all of one’s mental states will become manifest in his mental atmosphere, and accordingly, will affect those with whom he comes in close contact.” (Dumont, 1913)

Even with a positive personal magnetism you can still narrow it down further into precise elements. In a later chapter we’ll discuss the qualities of personal magnetism.

As a charismatic person, no bad emotion must be left without healing. Fear must be faced, as well as other negative emotions. It’s this Pillar that can develop your self-confidence, assertiveness and self-esteem. It’s upon this Pillar that you elevate your spiritual energy. The goal of integrating all mind, body and spirit, is to become an authentic person, faithful to your own principles and with a positive magnetic quality that draws others to you.

2) The Second Pillar is called “Will”. If I could point out the one thing that is missing in most men and women this would be it. In short, Will is about having a personality, being 100% sure of what it is that you want, and not giving up until you get it, as well as never being influenced by others. You must be in full control of yourself. As Haddock says: “Acquiring magnetism is a constructive effort. It is a building process. You are rearing a structure.” (Haddock, 1929). What is necessary for rearing this structure, is Will. Will allows you to steer the helm in the right direction and avoid distractions. How often have you set up a goal just to, a couple of months later, decide on another goal or another focus of attention that seemed more interesting? This way you’ll only dig a lot of shallow holes without ever going deep enough to find oil. Will keeps you focused and concentrated on the goal until you actually achieve it. Will reveals itself in the practice of all the other pillars but it’s important enough to deserve its own pillar. You train it with concentration, with dedication, with mind control and by doing what needs to be done on a daily basis.

3) The Third Pillar is called “Energy”. This is the fuel that feeds your body, mind and spirit. Without this pillar, everything falls apart. Your physical body is not the only body that you possess. You also have a mental body, which is trained in Pillar 1 and an energy body, which is developed in this pillar (depending on the esoteric tradition you follow, we can describe more bodies of man, but it’s not a topic to discuss in the present book).

For clarity purposes, we can divide the energy body in two parts. The first of these is the internal structure of energy called the “energetic double”. It’s the energy present in our physical body. It has centers of awareness, vortexes of energy called chakras and channels in which the energy moves through your body called nadis.

The second part of the energy body is the expansion of this energy outside of the physical limits of your body in a way that interacts and influences the world. We call it “Magnetic Aura”. This is a roughly egg-shaped field of energies surrounding the energetic double, extending out several feet from the physical body. It serves as the interface between the energy body of an individual and the outside world, and all the forces are reflected on its surface.

We are not going into too much detail on the theoretical or abstract aspects of this energy. But in this pillar we train the cultivation and use of this energy with the goal of developing a powerful personal magnetism that can be intensely felt by others.

4) The Fourth and last Pillar is called “Projection”, and in this Pillar you are able to understand what you are projecting to the outside world, how to project what you want, and how to feel what others are projecting. This Fourth Pillar also deals with improving your senses far beyond what you could ever expect, in a way that allows you to feel everything in your life more intensely than before. In the Projection Pillar you learn how to use the 7 Sources of Personal Magnetism: Gaze, Voice, Touch, Movement, Personal Space, Face, Thoughts and Feelings. These are the tools to project your own magnetism to the outside world and, as such, they must be developed to greater heights. The more developed they are, the more your charisma can shine. Training these Sources of Personal Magnetism is like polishing a diamond. There is value underneath the layers of dirt and coal, but if you don’t polish and facet it’s different faces, the diamond never reveals its true beauty.

You’ll notice that charismatic individuals have one or more of these sources that project a high degree of their own energy. Models train themselves to be able to project sexuality and glamour through their faces, movement and gaze. Actors train themselves using Feelings, Personal Space and Movement to be able to project what they need to convey to the audience. We have worked with actors and models, whose only need was to develop a high degree of Projection ability. It was explained to them in the beginning of the training that this alone doesn’t develop a permanent state of charisma, only a high personal magnetism in chosen situations. This was enough for their goals, so they didn’t need a larger training, only enough for a strong magnetic presence in their shows. Your personal goals dictate your priorities.

Although most famous charismatic individuals distinguish themselves with one of these pillars, it’s rare to find that one person has all four well developed. This doesn’t mean that all the other pillars have zero value for them. If this were so, they would most likely not be charismatic. So, although they have high values in one pillar, they also have at least one more with a somewhat high value.

Still, it's better to have medium levels in all Four Pillars than to have a high value in one Pillar and low value in the rest. Consistency is the key.

As mentioned, it's rare to find someone that has high levels in all Four Pillars, when you find someone like that, he/she's one in a million. You could be the least sensitive person in the world but you could literally feel this person entering a room. It would be one of those people that have the "turnaround effect", one of the 12 Attributes of Charisma: people just turn around because they feel the presence of the charismatic person. It's a level way beyond charisma; the magnetism is so great that it becomes a complete fascination effect through which others just want to be around this person. Perhaps you've had the privilege of meeting someone like this. This is what you have the potential to become if you follow through the Charisma School framework.

Chapter 6 – Developing Unshakable Inner Power

We have seen in Chapter 1 that charisma is a spiritual and personal quality, an appeal of personality that can attract others to you, but also an Inner Power that allows you to control your own mind, energy and body. We call that spiritual or personal quality that grows inside of you, Inner Power; we call its external manifestations, Personal Magnetism, and, finally we call its combination, Charisma. They are all interrelated in a complex web of energy transmissions.

Inner Power is what gives a high degree of self-confidence, self-esteem, assertiveness, and the extra edge that makes a difference on how you look and behave in and toward the world. It's a feeling inside of you which says you are able to achieve the things you set out to achieve. Inner power is what allows you to actually do, to achieve, to execute and to win.

As you develop Inner Power, you eliminate pressing fears, paralyzing doubts, inner questioning and automatic negativity. This inner power can't be something fake, or an empty power which is only illusionary and disappears when you dig deeper. If you attentively observe charismatic and confident people, you'll be able to perceive that many of them have this kind of illusionary power. Their power depends either on others, or on external aspects of themselves, like body or appearance, or wealth and social status. Anyone can develop this illusionary power to a charismatic level, but it will never be a true Inner Power since it's built on unstable foundations and can quickly crumble as fame disappears, or wealth is lost or the body loses its appeal.

The Inner Power we teach is the kind which comes solely from within. One that depends only on the real you and not on events you can't possibly control. It means a much higher degree of awareness and consciousness so you can increase your ability to perceive more about whatever you focus on, from physical energies to ordinary realities, to your relationships, business, emotions, thoughts and control of the subtle energies of your body. Expanding your consciousness can transform who you think you are and how you feel about yourself and your life.

Inner Power Dischargers

To understand Inner Power deeply, we need to ask ourselves why we don't already have it. There are several "Inner Power Dischargers" that drain our Inner Power. The media and authorities try to blame it on genetics or upbringing, but the truth is society is causing them. Society is taking away our power instead of empowering us to live a happier life, as it should be. The unnatural consumerism, the staged economic crisis, the lack of morals and ethics of our leaders, the religions that only want to enforce further control, the destruction of our environment and subsequent health issues. All these events contribute to creating weaker individuals, people who can lead normal lives, but definitely not empowered lives filled with Inner Power and Charisma. There are growing forces making an empowered life hard to attain.

Let's look at the collective Inner Power dischargers a bit more closely.

Excessive Consumerism

“It is preoccupation with possessions, more than anything else that prevents us from living freely and nobly.” Henry David Thoreau

We know that one of the causes of lack of Inner Power is the seductive appeal of consumerism and advertisements which pervades our society and a big part of the world. Before we move any further, don't get me wrong, I'm not an extreme minimalist or a monk living with no possessions. I have possessions the same way everyone else does. What you have to consider is: are these things controlling you or are you controlling them?

The ownership and consumerism becomes excessive when it extends beyond what we need (Becker, 2012). You can see how the marketing of products reshape our desires around the things we buy. We have credit so we can buy more things we don't need. And everything and everyone around us seem to think this is normal. We have certain needs that must be fulfilled but do we really need 20 pairs of shoes, 3 cell phones and the latest gadget?

The capitalist society is taking advantage of our unfulfilled needs to stimulate the buying of products and promising that this is what will make us happy and fulfilled. After you get a new car, you'll be happy and people will admire you. After you get a new phone, you'll be moving up the status ladder. All this excessive consumerism leads to the creation of a whole lot of gadgets which are only good for a couple of years before we need to trade them.

All these things slowly rob us of our life and our power. We are constantly wasting our time, energy and effort, pursuing things which don't improve our Inner Power and never deliver the fulfilment they promise. We are constantly following our desires to newer, bigger and faster things. And if there's one thing all the ancient philosophies have in common is the way they consider mankind's main cause of suffering to be its passions or desires. People are prevented from truly living because they are dominated by these desires.

As Judith Simmer-Brown eloquently writes: “The roots of consumerism lie in the ego gratification, it's an ever-increasing path of wants and desires.

Consumerism recruits new converts through the flood of mass media, it dulls the consumer, making us oblivious to the most important things in life. Shopping is a core activity in sustaining a culture of the weakness of the self. As traditional societies modernize, consumerism is the most alluring path.” (Simmer-Brown, 2002)

Joshua Becker concludes: “It is time to take a step back and realize that excessive consumption, consumerism and pursuing our materialistic desires is not delivering on its promise to provide happiness and fulfilment. Consumption and an economic activity is necessary and we’re definitely not against that, but excessive consumption is not. And life can be better lived (and more enjoyed) by intentionally rejecting it.” (Becker, 2012)

Religion

Religion should serve the purpose of empowering us and facilitating our reconnection with the divine and the spiritual that is – and always has been – present in each and every one of us. It should be a guide, providing us with a path, stimulating us to reconnect with the divine in ourselves and thrive to be the best we can be. Yet, this does not happen with the major religions.

All you see is a set of rituals, a set of dogmas and a lot of control amongst them. If we follow certain outer (external to ourselves, observable by others) rules, participate in rituals and believe in doctrines then, after we die, we will be in heaven, or nirvana or whatever you want to call it. If you don't do these rituals or believe in these doctrines you'll spend eternity in hell or reincarnate as a goat or some similar ill fate. Religion is mostly based on fear and fear creates and facilitates control.

Most mainstream, commercial and even new age religions were put in place to control us and keep us enslaved and dependent upon a set of principles created by men just like you and me. The worst part is that these ideas are instilled in us from early childhood when our brains are in development. Thus we believe in all these credos at face value, because we know nothing about the world. If someone in an authority position tells us something is true, then it must be. And so, as we grow up, we take what we learned as being the only truth.

Nonetheless it's important to clarify: it's not the religion, nor the ideas transmitted by the religion that are the problem; neither is the problem the many believers behind it nor the priests or teachers of that particular religion. I have been fortunate enough to meet many individuals of different religions, from Buddhist monks to Catholic priests, to Rabbis, and I found that most of these people are exceptional and amazing individuals that stand out from the crowd. The main problem is not them, nor the religious ideals; the problem comes with the enforcement and application of these ideals by organizations as well as the control upon which they operate. This is what robs us of our power. This is how we give away our control.

The lack of character and values currently present in our society

Currently we seem to glorify greed, corruption, envy, and superfluous ways of life. We see our leaders – politicians, government officials, business leaders – those who should be role models to the rest of us, those who should guide and lead based on their own Inner Power, those who every child should look at and see an ideal person to follow, but instead we see them corrupted by power and wealth, we see them setting bad examples for those who want to follow them. Often we see them in scandals of corruption, sexual misconduct and abuse of power. This is not how our leaders should behave.

The new leaders our children and teenagers look up to are the entertainers of the world. We see them idolizing actors and actresses, musicians, sports athletes and so on. Never before in the history of the world were entertainers (like actors or singers) considered the cream of society. Before we had kings and queens that ruled the kingdom, important military figures that stood out in the fields of war, artists and philosophers. Now we have the actors that took part in the latest vampire movie. We could elect important teachers, scientists or writers to be idols to follow, yet, we prefer superficial entertainers. Needless to say that these entertainers are rarely considered role models to follow due to the consistent scandals of drug abuse, suicide attempts, materialistic lifestyles and public betrayals.

We are also forced to swallow all the advertising around us, on TV, on the internet, on the street and now even in our phones. Most of these commercials are for new watches, new clothes, new cars, new phones or computers. Nothing we could call truly important to our development, just basic superficial objects. It's deeply concerning that these are the values we are cultivating.

And these are our surroundings: weak and corrupted leaders, drug filled materialistic entertainers as idols and everywhere you turn advertising for useless products shoved down your optic nerves.

But not everything is bad. One of the few blessings of living in our modern day and age with all the inner conflicts and the disappearance of values that is more prevalent each passing day, is how we are forced to turn within if we want to find some meaning in life, if we want to become aware of who we are and discover the power that we each have inside of ourselves. Society can give us distractions, but not true meaning. All these anxieties and insecurities and problems in our society give us new incentive to seek important sources of guidance and strength that we most likely overlooked. And so we look inside and we search for this source of guidance, this source of Inner Power that will bring back our lost feelings of power, happiness and achievement.

Illusionary sources of Inner Power

The Illusionary Sources of Inner Power are those sources we think will bring happiness, confidence or Inner Power. We believe these are sources of Inner Power because they make us feel confident. But these are illusionary since they are only temporary and exterior to our true self. Temporary because they are not permanent, and their situation can change at any moment and exterior to your true self because these sources don't rely solely on yourself. These can also be a weak point that can be used against you. As you identify yourself with something exterior that's not part of your true self, you develop a weakness that can be exploited by others or by darker forces inside yourself. While you continue to deposit your trust and confidence in these sources, you'll never achieve a real Inner Power.

This teaching is based on one of the fundamental principles of Roberto Assagioli, Psychosynthesis: "We are dominated by everything with which our self becomes identified. We can dominate and control everything from which we disidentify ourselves." (Assagioli, 1974)

Here are just some of the illusionary sources of inner power.

Wealth and Status

This is one of the main sources from which many people extract their power. The identification to how much money we have, the car we drive, the house we live in, the electronic gadgets we possess or the size of the pay check we deposit each month. All these things should not be related to your Inner Power. They can be external manifestations of your Charisma but they can't be something to which your Inner Power is identified. They are completely exterior to yourself. You can guard them as closely and safely as possible, but they can still disappear from one moment to the next, hence, if you identify with them, then from one moment to the next you can also lose your confidence and Inner Power.

Don't get me wrong, just because they are Illusionary Sources of Inner Power doesn't mean that you shouldn't pursue them or thrive to achieve them, it just means you shouldn't identify with them, or deposit your trust and Inner Power into them. Get them, enjoy them but always remember they are external to you and you can lose them easily. By keeping this in mind, even if you lose all your wealth in one day, you'll never lose your inner power and the ability to get it all back if you want to.

Body

Our body is one of the main Illusionary Sources of Inner Power. We can often find men and women who want to keep their youth no matter what, with plastic surgeries and expensive treatments. There are others, blessed with genetics, who place their whole self and identification in their bodies. Yet, if they lose their good looks, for some reason, either age catches up or an accident happens, their power disappears.

Our body is an important vehicle throughout life and must be taken care of, it's even a crucial part of our own Charisma School framework, yet, as something which is exterior to us, it can change from one moment to the next; we can lose our abilities, muscles or beauty at any time even if we are careful. This can happen with many car accidents that happen on a daily basis throughout the world, or with a sudden disease. So, we can't place a strong identification in our body, it must be considered as an illusionary source of inner power.

Worldly Achievements

A lot of us identify ourselves with our achievements: worldly, as well as intellectual and even spiritual. Achievements like academic degrees, graduations and PhDs, mountains you climb, job titles or subjects you learn. However these are just more Illusionary Sources of Inner Power.

The seek for knowledge and life achievements is important in life, and can even be a stepping stone to real Inner Power, but as a base to deposit our identification it can also be something that hold us back, making us hold on to something that is transitory. For these achievements are also external, since we can be robbed of them by old age and the loss of mental capacity. By holding on too hard we are at risk of becoming someone forever longing for past glories, as is the case with many of the older people we meet in our lives.

Remember, although these achievements – no matter how small or how big they may seem to others - are important to build our inner power and we use them in our courses, they are not the true source of it.

The True Source of Inner Power

The True Source of Inner Power is our center of pure-self-consciousness, an essence of yourself, a center of pure and unaltered Will capable of having a dynamic power of mastering, directing and using all these worldly achievements, psychological processes and physical body to whatever you want. It's the permanent factor in the ever varying flow of personal life.

This should always be our only source of inner power. Not wealth, body, worldly achievements or anything else. For our present purposes, it's enough for you to know that our Charisma School focuses on developing true Inner Power that accompanies you throughout life, in the good and in the bad moments without ceasing. And the external manifestation of it is charisma since you'll develop an unshakable confidence, regardless of what happens and a personal quality that inspires everyone around you.

Chapter 7 – Use Your Will for Flawless Mind Control

What is Will?

Frank Channing Haddock calls Will: “an energy which is susceptible of increase in quantity and of development in quality” (Haddock, 1907). It is a worthy description of the energy behind it, although it doesn’t quite say what you can do with it, nor its functions. To this effect, Roberto Assagioli described it more eloquently:

“Will has a directive and regulatory function; it balances and constructively utilizes all the other activities and energies of the human being without repressing any of them. The function of will is similar to that performed by the helmsman of a ship. He knows what the ship’s course should be, and keeps her steadily on it, despite the drifts caused by the wind and current. But the power he needs to turn the wheel is altogether different from that required to propel the ship through the water, whether it be generated by engines, the pressure of the winds on the sail or effort of the rowers.” (Assagioli, 1974).

So the true function of Will is to direct, not to impose. This contradicts the usual definition of the Victorian Will most people still associate with. Will Power was a central virtue 100 years ago in the culture of the Victorian era but fell out of flavor around the beginning of the 20th century with the discoveries of Freud’s unconscious (Baumeister & Tierney, 2011). Will Power became associated with a restraining and unpleasant self-control that only holds down the contents of our mind. When used incorrectly, it can be hazardous. But when used and awakened correctly it can be “one of the greatest determining factors in a person’s well-being” (Baumeister & Tierney, 2011).

Everyone has a Will. Even if you think you don’t, it’s still there, only waiting to be awakened and reconnected with. Just because you haven’t exercised your “Will Power muscle” and let your temptations get the best of you, doesn’t mean you have lost it, Will is still there. You only need to awaken it. The best way to awaken your Will is described by Roberto Assagioli:

“However, the simplest and most frequent way in which we discover our will is through determined action and struggle. When we make a physical or mental effort when we are actively wrestling with some obstacle or coping with opposing forces, we feel a specific power rising up within us; and this inner energy gives us the experience of willing” (Assagioli, 1974).

What kind of work can you do for Inner Power and Will training?

It's impossible to separate Inner Power from Will. They are intimately connected and when you work on your Will, you are working on your Inner Power and vice-versa. To develop Will what you have to work on is mind control. Not controlling the minds of others, but controlling your own mind. Even if your goal is to control the mind of others, you aren't worse off by first learning how to control your own.

Controlling your mind is directly related to achieving whatever you want to achieve in this life, be it material goods, fulfilling relationships or simply a happier life. It's hard to achieve this without some degree of mind control since if you don't control your own mind, someone else will. And if not someone else, at least your own unconscious will control you. And this is not something you want to happen considering there's a lot of unknown psychological material in there.

In Charisma School we state that we should take responsibility for our own mind and life, and do what we want to do as opposed to being driven by someone or something else. In other words, we should take the driver seat in life, as opposed to riding in the back seat. This is where our mind control fits in. You need to know where you want to go, and make sure you get there.

There are 7 Elements of Mind Control; seven elements that need mastering for you to have full control over your mind. They have different degrees in order to be fully mastered, but once you are aware of them and their influence on you, and you start to use the first few methods of mind control, you'll notice a distinct difference.

Here are the 7 Elements:

1) Behavior control

With behavior control you can actually do what you need and want to do. Your behaviors are precisely what you like them to be. If you want to write 2000 words every day, that's what you do. If you want to have your projects delivered in time, that's what you do. If you want to exercise every day for 1 hour, that's what you do. If you want to eat well and healthy, that's what you do.

With behavior control, you stop being influenced by random "moods" and feelings, and just do what needs to be done. Many individuals just get lost in their own moods and inner feelings and stop doing what they want to do. They are like a leaf in a wind, getting carried away by the wind instead of standing their ground for what they believe in and want to do.

In other words, their behaviors are dictated by their subconscious mind instead of their conscious and rational mind. When you allow this, you are allowing your passive mind to control you based on what you feel, instead of you controlling what you want to do. As you can imagine, it's hard to go far in life if you allow this to happen.

Exercise: Behavior Awareness

There are many steps to behavior control but the first one is always to become aware. Ask yourself constantly during the day: "What am I doing?" and afterwards ask again: "What do I want to be doing?" and then compare your answers. If they are different, change what you are doing. Obviously this presupposes an already trained mind in your thoughts to understand exactly what your goals are and what you truly want to accomplish. Answers like: "I want to be at some paradisiac beach reading a book" when you should be working for your life goal are not acceptable answers.

2) Thought control

Thought control means to be able to think in a way appropriate to what you want to achieve in life. It demands a certain amount of control over your inner voice. For many people their inner voice is a passive activity. They don't have any control over it, it just happens to them. If depressed inner voice happens, then that's the way it is. If angry inner voice happens, then that's the way it is. No control, just passivity.

Yet, if there's something mystical traditions have taught us over 5000 years, is that we do have control over what we think. Changing our thoughts is possible. It means that instead of thinking negatively, you start to think positively. One thought at a time. This is complete mind training as advocated by Tibetan Buddhism, Zen Buddhism, Christianity, Islam and many other religions and mystical traditions. It's possible to change your thoughts, we don't need to be passively at their mercy.

For some people reading this, it may seem overly simplistic. In fact it is. This is not as simple as it seems. If you have tried it, you'll know. There's much more to it, there are many particular techniques and processes to start to control your mind, and even so, it takes time to be able to do this consistently. But you need to keep in mind that this is not only possible, but required if you want to have any kind of control over your mind.

Exercise: Thought Awareness

This is an important exercise for thought control, straight from the work of Franz Bardon "Initiation into Hermetics" (Bardon, 2015). In this exercise you establish yourself as an active observer of your thoughts. When the observer perspective is established, the multitude of thoughts that normally arises will naturally begin to slow.

You can read it straight from the source:

"Seat yourself comfortably in a chair or lie down on a sofa or bed. Relax your entire body, close your eyes and observe your train of thought for five minutes, and make an attempt to remember these thoughts. In the beginning you will notice that thoughts which pertain to matters of everyday life, professional or job-related matters, worries etc. will rush in on you. Your position to this flow of thoughts should be that of a silent observer, completely free and independent. This exercise will either be difficult or easy, depending upon your situation and your present state of mind. When difficulties occur, do not lose your train of thought and do not lose sight of yourself, but observe your thoughts attentively. Do not fall asleep during this exercise. Should you become tired, immediately discontinue the exercise and postpone it till another time at which you will have made up your mind that you will not fall victim to tiredness. People of the Orient, for example India, sprinkle or wash their faces and upper body with cold water in order to remain alert, so that they do not lose valuable time. In order to prevent and overcome tiredness and sleepiness you can take a few deep breaths before you begin your exercise.

The attentive student will notice how, in the beginning, he is besieged by thoughts, and how quickly they pass by him, so that it will be difficult for him to remember all of them. However, from one exercise to the next he will notice that these thoughts will appear less chaotically, and will abate little by little until only a few thoughts emerge in the consciousness as if from afar.”

3) Attention control

Controlling your attention is another key element of mind control. Your attention literally decides what you see, hear and experience from the world. If you enter a room only seeking people with yellow shirts, you'll miss all those with red, blue and black shirts. If your attention is turned to your inner life, you won't see the exterior life. If your attention is only turned to the outside, you won't see what's happening on the inside.

Concentration and attention is of critical importance for many mystic traditions. Christianity, Buddhism, Western Esotericism and Sufism all have specific practices to train attention. They know it's fundamental. The general message is common in all of them: if you want to have any kind of control over yourself, attention is one of the first things you should cultivate.

We shouldn't need to resort to any kind of mystical tradition to learn this fundamental aspect of our mind that affects us in our everyday life. It should be taught outside of any mystic framework, such as any other skill is taught. Unfortunately, this doesn't happen and our attention control is much worse than in the past.

As you can imagine, once you learn how to regulate your attention and overall mental state, there's all sorts of good side effects. Emotional regulation, state control and inner voice all tend to fall into place.

Another interesting fact: if there's anything in common with the greatest geniuses of all sorts of arts and sciences throughout history, it's their ability to sustain their attention through large periods of time on a subject of their choice, completely focused with a clear and vivid mind. They may have been lucky enough to be born with this ability to focus their attention on a subject, but for all of us who were not lucky enough to be granted this gift, there is a solution: training attention to a good enough level. And we can all do it.

Exercise: Counting heartbeats

Go to a silent place where you will not be disturbed and close our eyes. Focus inside yourself and notice your heart beating. You can listen to it with your internal hearing or you can simply take your pulse or put your hand over your heart or jugular vein in the neck.

Then you'll count each beat until you reach the count of 20. One beat, two beats, three beats, and so on, until it reaches 20.

When you reach the count of 20, you'll start the counting again from zero but you only count every other beat. Meaning, you count the first one as number one, then another beat comes which you don't count, and you only count the next one which is beat two, then the next beat you don't count, and the next one is beat three and so on.

When you reach the count of 20, you'll only count every two beats. Meaning you count the first one as number one, then you don't count the next two beats, but the third beat is number 2, then you don't count the next two beats and the next one is number three... And so on, until you reach the count of 20.

When you reach the count of 20, you'll only count every three beats.

When you reach this count of 20, count every four beats and so on until you reach counting every 10 beats.

As you'll see, this is not an easy exercise, especially as the numbers start to grow. It starts off easily with counting heart beats normally, but soon enough, it becomes a real strain to your concentration. When I started doing this exercise in the beginning of my own training, I did it for more than 30 minutes, each time increasing the count so that I could reach ever higher numbers. Don't neglect this; it's a powerful concentration exercise.

One important note: if you lose track of the count, you need to start all over.

4) Managing feelings

We all have negative and positive feelings on a day-to-day basis. This is part of being human. Sometimes we feel good, other times we feel bad. We hope to spend more time feeling good than bad, but still, negative feelings and emotions are part of us and in a way, inevitable. For that reason, we should be able to accept and work with all feelings that arise in us, both positive and negative.

If you follow all the other mind control elements, your amount of negative feelings will be much reduced. This happens, for example, through inner voice control. Inner voice control naturally leads to less negative feelings since you'll have less negative thoughts. Yet, even when you're a master at controlling your inner voice, negative feelings are still bound to pop up every now and then.

We shouldn't suppress them, nor should we NOT focus on them. Quite the contrary, we should welcome them and accept them as part of ourselves. Instead of trying to repress them even further, we should open up to them. By allowing all your feelings to take their course and move freely, as they should, you are in fact working with them instead of working against them.

The problem with negative feelings is always when we resist them. When we resist them, they become stronger and stronger. This is precisely what happens with many psycho disorders, the non-acceptance and resistance of negative feelings. We often bury them and don't listen to them, and after some years of doing this, naturally, problems are bound to pop up.

The attentive reader might now be wondering if this is not contradictory to the previous elements which mentioned not allowing your feelings to run the show. We can't allow ourselves to be run solely by our feelings, yet we can't ignore them nor repress them. There's a time and place for everything, work when you need to work but leave enough time to handle your feelings at a later time.

Exercise: Mindfulness of feelings

Don't think of this exercise as something you "master". It's a practice to do to the best of your ability. Even after decades of dedication it's still a challenge.

Settle into a comfortable sitting position with an erect but relaxed posture. You can be lying down if you don't fall asleep. Take several deep breaths. Then allow your breath to flow in its normal, ever changing manner. With a quality of spacious awareness, rest your attention upon the sensation of touch emanating from your breathing. Breath flows in and flows out either at the rims of your nostrils or in your chest or abdomen, wherever the sensations are most predominant.

If a sensation or experience in your body is strong enough to pull your attention away from the breath, allow your awareness to rest on that sensation. Notice if any feelings arise. Note whether the experience is pleasant, unpleasant or neutral. Spend some time being aware of these qualities in your experiences and your reactions to them. What do you feel in your body when experiencing the different feelings?

During this process, welcome any thoughts or feelings that arise. You might feel bored. Thoughts such as, "What a waste of time!" may arise; or perhaps you are planning what to do next. Observe these thoughts, but when you become lost in thought and you notice it, appreciate that moment of noticing, of waking up and being mindful. Then gently return your attention to the breath and continue to follow it. If you ever feel confused about what you are experiencing or what you should do, simply return your attention to your breath, in and out, in and out...

As you focus on the feeling quality of an experience, notice whether it is something that lasts or whether it comes into awareness, is present for a while and then disappears.

During the day, take a few moments to be mindful of the feeling tone of your breath and overall feelings, especially when you are feeling any kind of negative feelings like hatred, jealousy, anger, and so on. This is a good way of helping yourself to settle down into the present moment and become mindful of your feelings.

5) Body Mastery

Body Mastery is simply the ability to listen to your body and give it what it requires for optimum functioning. Which is not as easy as it seems. Considering that obesity and heart problems are some of the leading causes of death in the modern world, my first guess is that we aren't very good at it. Or we can be, but due to some of the other elements of mind control, we are prevented from giving our body what it needs.

But let's just assume the other elements are not at fault here and you can already control your behaviors and thoughts in a way that you can take care of your body the best way possible. Even so, you need to become aware of what your body needs, how much sleep, how much exercise, how much food, what kind of food, among others.

All of these components require a specific awareness, it's not enough to just monitor what the latest diet fad says or even what your doctor tells you to do. You need to go deeper. Listening to your body means keeping constant attention of your energy levels, your bodily feelings, improving and changing your diet, sleeping and exercising to whatever fits you best at a determined time. It's possible to feel at peak performance most of the time, but it takes effort, as everything else worthwhile in life.

Exercise: Diet, Exercise and Sleep Log

There are 3 important activities for you to monitor and control. We call them the Holy Trinity of Body Mastery: Diet, Exercise and Sleep. These are the three activities we need to optimize to achieve great body mastery. Although there's much to be said about all three of them, you can't understand what you need to change and adjust without knowing and monitoring what you are doing now. As we often repeat throughout this book, awareness is always the first step.

We always recommend to our students to keep a log of how long they sleep (at what time they went to bed and what time they got up), how long and how often they exercised and what they ate. Keeping a journal with a log of all these activities is one of the best investments you can do for yourself. I've had students who were only able to recognize how little and how erratic their sleeping schedule was after they started noting this log. No wonder they had chronic tiredness. The same happens with the food log. Often we have no idea how much junk food we are truly eating.

Make sure you keep this rigorous log for at least two months.

6) Energy Mastery

By now, you should understand the importance we give to this invisible, yet crucial component of life, called energy. We talk about several kinds of energy but the two main ones we strive for mastery are tension energy, due to its effects on personal magnetism, and sexual energy, due to the influence it has over all the interactions we come across and to our own day-to-day life.

Being able to recognize and control the different kinds of energies is of paramount importance. Although you can have an indirect effect on, thus changing it, by using mind based tools, the most efficient way to make sure you are using your energy correctly is with methods and techniques developed specifically for that purpose and which work directly with energy. In most cases, the first objective is always to become aware of the energy in your body, and only afterward do you learn how to manipulate it and use it in your own day-to-day life.

To illustrate the importance of energy in your life, I'll tell you a story of an acquaintance of mine who spent 10 years in a silent retreat in the mountains of Nepal. He was being guided in this retreat by a Tibetan guru. After these 10 years he returned to the world into crowded Europe. He vowed to continue the monastic lifestyle but now teaching it to others. In less than 6 months he was married and laid down the robe. He handled the celibacy perfectly as he was in the retreat. The problem happened when he returned to the world and saw a world of temptation at arm's reach. He couldn't handle the sexual energy generated by all the women he saw. He learned to control his mind in a retreat setting, but forgot to learn how to control his own internal energies, especially the sexual energy which is always the main culprit in the fall of men.

In the chapter on energy you can find a bigger description about it, as well as exercises that prompt you to work with these energies.

7) Mastering interactions

Mastering interactions and relationships with other people is of no less importance considering our life is filled with them on a daily basis and we depend on interactions with others for everything we do in life. To learn, find a job, eat, have fun, establish a family, pretty much everything. Although this can be an obvious consequence of all the other mind control elements, it's also a different aspect of it, one that requires its own mastery.

This element means the ability to have authentic relationships as well as influence, attract and inspire when you need to. As you can see, there are two parts to this element, and neither is less important than the other nor are they contradictory, as it might seem at first glance.

The first one is to be able to have authentic relationships, to be able to express yourself in a way you choose to when you are with others. Unfortunately, today many relationships have become superficial and tend to end up doing more harm than good. Behind many of these superficial connections lie selfish intentions, ones which sometimes we are not even consciously aware of. We feel obligated to stay in touch with individuals who do nothing but bring us down, thus hindering our ability to live our life to its fullest. We are forced to create masks in several social situations as opposed to expressing how we truly are.

Joseph Campbell said: “The privilege of a lifetime is being who you are.” (Campbell, 1995). The ability to be authentic with others is a vital part of Charisma. Your masks are necessary, but there are always moments when they should be down. The second part of this element is to be able to influence, attract and inspire. In life, it’s not enough to be ourselves; we need to be able to get what we want. Be it to win a project, to make a sale or to convince someone. For these goals, we need more than just authentic relationships. We need our own personal influence and magnetism in order to do it.

They both complement each other. I know this may seem antagonistic, but we can’t be so foolish as to think that everyone has only their best intentions in mind for us or that the universe will provide everything for our goals and passions. The ability to influence gives you the balance between achieving what you want in life and living authentically; between activity and passivity.

A magnetic person has authentic relationships the same way he can effortlessly influence and attract. They are both required in life and neither should be neglected.

Chapter 8 - The Energetic Basis of Charisma

The general concept of Energy

I've mentioned before the concept of charisma and personal magnetism as being related to some kind of energy. And in fact, energy is one of the most important factors of charisma. There isn't any one single definition of energy, as each ancient and esoteric text talks about it in a different way. We can equate this energy to Prana, or Qi, Orgone or pneuma; several notions which intersect each other at some point since they all try to describe something that can't be adequately described in words.

We can explore through the yogic notion of Prana. The Indian Yogi B.K.S. Iyengar, the creator of Iyengar Yoga and disciple of Krishnamacharya, said: “It is as difficult to explain Prana as it is to explain God. Prana is the energy permeating the universe at all levels. It is physical, mental, intellectual, sexual, spiritual and cosmic energy. All vibrating energies are prana. All physical energies such as heat, light, gravity, magnetism and electricity are also prana. It is the hidden or potential energy in all beings, released to the fullest extent in times of danger. It is the prime mover of all activity. It is energy which creates, protects and destroys. Vigor, power, vitality, life and spirit are all forms of prana.” (Iyengar, 1981).

In several ancient scriptures, Prana means breath; they talk about drawing the Prana through the left nostril and expelling it through the right and vice versa. But in other scriptures, it's referred more along the lines of “life-Force” for which breath is the gross expression of this subtle force. Other texts identify Prana as the infinite consciousness and deep reality; Krishnamacharya, a great Indian yogi linked Prana to consciousness. There are plenty of definitions and different types of Prana even among the same traditions, so we need to cast a wide net to include all of these possible meanings.

In the Chinese tradition, the term Qi also has several definitions and different types of qi. Giovanni Maciocia, in his well-known TCM text says: “According to Chinese medicine, there are many different 'types' of Qi affecting our body and Mind, ranging from the subtle and rarefied to the very dense and coarse. All the various types of Qi, however, are ultimately one Qi, merely manifesting in different forms. [...]Although Qi remains fundamentally the same, it puts on 'different hats' in different places and changes its form according to the place that it is in and to which of its different functions it is assuming” (Maciocia, 2005).

The Chinese use Qi in many different domains. It's not limited to energetic practices or traditional Chinese medicine; it's also related to everyday life, for instance, connections to emotional and mental states. For example: too many worries can cause damage to your spleen and they are the result of a Qi problem in your spleen. Or unbalanced Chi is associated to being frightened and having heart damage. Then we have different types of Qi, like for example: Shen Chi, which is usually associated with the spirit and often times with the blood; Gu Chi, which derives from food; then we have the Qi of each organ, Qi from the lungs, liver, spleen and so on.

Giovanni also mentions: “In Chinese Medicine, the term 'Qi' is used in two major ways. First, it indicates the refined energy produced by the Internal Organs, which has the function of nourishing the body and mind. This refined energy takes several forms depending on its location and function. Gathering Qi (Zong Qi), for example, is in the chest and nourishes the Heart and Lungs. Original Qi (Yuan Qi) is in the Lower Burner and nourishes the Kidneys. Secondly, 'Qi' indicates the functional activity of the internal organs. When used in this sense, it does not indicate a refined substance as above, but simply the complex of functional activities of any organ. For example, when we speak of Liver-Qi, we do not mean the 'portion' of Qi residing in the Liver, but rather the complex of the Liver's functional activities, that is, ensuring the smooth flow of Qi. In this sense, we can speak of Liver-Qi, Heart-Qi, Lung-Qi, Stomach-Qi, etc.”

In other words, both the Chinese concept of Qi and the yogic concept of Prana can be broad concepts with multiple subdivisions and are not as linear as we in the West make them out to be. It's not so simple as to say Prana or Qi is life energy.

In Charisma School we mostly train two energy types which are the most relevant for the production of charisma or personal magnetism: Tension Energy and Sexual Energy. We consider them subdivisions of this whole and broad concept of Qi, but we can't reduce them to tension energy or sexual energy alone.

Tension Energy or Magnetic Energy

Tension energy comes straight from the nerves and is a powerful kind of energy that manifests itself in personal magnetism. You probably already know and have heard way too much about the negative side of this energy: it's called stress. I'm sure I don't need to lecture you on the problems stress can cause on any given organism whether human or animal. So, we must agree that this is a powerful energy that can be used for good but also has its negative side. Stress is the bad type of tension energy. Not only will it hinder your work with personal magnetism but it can also harm your health.

It's important to understand that the tension energy we develop in Charisma School is not stress, nor is it negative in any way to your body and health (quite the contrary). In fact, tension energy can be considered the kind of good energy that may come from stress – although in a bit more evolved way.

I'll explain more clearly: you know that too much stress isn't good for your health, but it turns out too little isn't ideal, either. While chronic stress – the one that never lets you go – sets off a trigger of inflammation in the body, increasing the risk for a lot of diseases -, in small doses, it's actually healthy. This kind of good short-term stress triggers the production of protective chemicals and increases activity in immune cells that boost the body's defenses. In fact, Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, showed that short periods of stress mobilized all major types of immune cells, or leukocytes, to potential infection sites around the body. The researchers say this stress-induced boost in the number of immune cells may be advantageous for fighting infections and other diseases. So your brain and body get a boost! Short term stress strengthens the immune system, sharpens your memory and makes you more alive.

But what if you could get these benefits and also reduce the bad stress and its effects on your body, while transforming it into useful energy? This is what we are doing when training tension energy. We generate short-term stress in the body, which also transforms the stress that we already have into useful tension energy for our purposes. It's a sort of energy transmutation.

I won't go too deeply into the explanation of the differences between stress and tension energy because you'll immediately know the difference between them as soon as you do the exercise below. With the stress energy you feel depleted, tired, not in the mood to do anything. With the tension energy you feel energized and invigorated; your health improves and your general stress lowers.

But why are they so different yet so similar? Nervous stress energy is an automatic reaction from your body and mind to some event or thinking. It's an unconscious reaction and is hard to control. Your body gets jittery, you start to tap your feet and move your hands around. You accumulate too much energy inside of you that you can't control. Your thinking about a situation generates the energy, but then you can't control it.

Most stress treatments – at least the ones that don't involve pills– include body relaxation, like the Schultz Autogenic training (Luthe & Schultz, 1969) and Jacobson's progressive muscle relaxation (Jacobson, 1938) to mention two of them; and this means that with these exercises you are letting go and releasing this uncontrolled energy trapped inside you. These exercises work – in part – but it's hard to beat chronic stress with these exercises, since they don't actually change your mindset.

So while stress – for our purposes - is having too much uncontrolled energy inside of you, with the exercises of tension energy, you'll control this energy and give it an objective while at the same time generating more energy. You enter a process of energy transmutation.

Keep in mind that transmutation of energy is not some new-age mumbo-jumbo; if you've studied the works of Freud and Jung, you'll see their own explanation of sublimation, the defense mechanism in action. Although, to be accurate, Freud and Jung had different views of sublimation but Jung didn't deny, he just thought it was a bigger thing than what Freud reduced it to. If you're a psychotherapist or you've done psychotherapy, most likely you've already encountered sublimation which is the way in which socially unacceptable impulses are transformed into socially acceptable actions or behaviors, possibly converting the initial impulse. There are even some theories in which this energy is the cause of major illnesses.

To be honest, the real nature of this process is not well known, but such is the case with most types of energies. For instance, it cannot be claimed that we have grasped the essential nature of electricity, but we know enough about its manifestations and the laws regulating them to be able to utilize electricity in many diverse and often complicated ways, as in electronics. It is the same in this field. We don't know the ultimate nature of these energies and their transmutations, but we have a growing knowledge of the laws that govern them, and this enables us to utilize said energies through appropriate and efficient methods based on these laws.

You can experience this in the exercise you are about to read, in which you will tense one hand. But it's not so simple. Behind every motion or movement, there must be a certain degree of tension or it will have no vitality. This tension energy is not laziness or devitalization nor is it stiffness or rigidity. In other words, it's not a condition of rest or of fixed strength – it's the progressive increase of energy.

The process is simple: when nerves and muscles are lazy, they depend upon a supply of power from the vital sources of the body. When they are fully tensed, they are held by a fixed degree of energy, which is alive but not progressing. When the muscles are taken from a relaxed condition to one of strength, but not allowed to reach a limit or to become set, the nerves are kept in a progressive condition. This ever changing effort makes a continual demand on the source of supply, and the creation of energy is the result of that demand.

If you set your muscles with great effort and tension, you tense them all at once for the degree of effort at hand. If you need more power, you set them at a still greater tension; but each setting is fixed for the time being. On the other hand, if you wish to generate the good tension energy we speak of, you do not set the nerves at a predetermined tension level; instead you start them on the way to flow with greater force as your magnetic forces from them grow with vigor. The flow increases as it takes place. If the tension were to start at a fixed limit, it could not increase unless more was required of it, in which case it would be a series of jumps. It is the increase in vitality during any tensing that generates magnetism, this way a magnetic person is always improving his power instead of using it up. When the increase in nervous flow approaches the force used by the muscles, stop. Never go as far with the nerves, as with the muscles in their tension.

Exercise: How to feel Tension Energy

Stand up and relax your right hand completely, just shake it a little bit and remove all tension or force from it and allow it to rest naturally at your side. Now, GRADUALLY, start to TENSE your hand. GRADUALLY and SLOWLY, start to tense your thumb, index finger, middle finger, ring finger, pinky, then the palm of your hand, now increase the power a little bit more, a bit more, a bit more, until it's shaking a little bit from tension. Don't tense until the limit. Just 90% of tension. This process of gradual tension should take you no less than 2 minutes. Then hold that state for at least 30 seconds. Now, start to SLOWLY release this tension the same way you built it up. Start by decreasing the energy a little bit, then decrease the tension on your palm, pinky finger, ring finger, middle finger, index finger, thumb, until your hand is completely relaxed again, with no tension whatsoever. Take no less than 2 minutes in this process.

Now compare the feelings you have in the right hand with your left hand that was relaxed the whole time. If you are observing correctly and you have sufficient bodily awareness, you'll feel an increase of vitality and energy in that right hand which you won't have in your left hand. Even if you now just tense your left hand quickly as if you're grabbing something and letting go, the energy generated won't be the same and will quickly die down. Only the progressive tensing and relaxing generates the kind of energy we are interested in for personal magnetism, which is tension energy.

Sexual Energy

Sexual Energy is the energy of sex and the one that drives the urge of sexual impulses and raw physical attractiveness. Also, everything related to the senses and sensual qualities has its roots in sexual energy. The same with all kinds of sensual pleasure. That's why many women equal eating a certain type of desert or chocolate with sexual activity. It's in fact linked since the pleasure you get from it originates in a sexual nature.

This energy doesn't only manifest during sexual activity. While sexual activity is the easiest way you can feel its presence, it's still there during your whole day. It also doesn't only manifest itself when you are sexually aroused. It can arise due to many different reasons: from seeing that huge sexual billboard on your way to work or from looking at your cute coworker that doesn't even know you exist or, as mentioned above, eating a particular delicious desert.

What you experience in these kinds of situations is a certain type of feelings which grows in your body. If you are not in tune with it, you might even miss it. And these are the feelings you, consciously or unconsciously, can repress, control, let go of and release, manipulate, transcend or transmute.

We all have distinct feelings in our bodies when sexual energy is present. If there's a natural expression of this energy inside of your body, there will be pleasant feelings which your mind accepts. If your awareness is good enough, you can feel them and manipulate them.

They are more prevalent and obvious with a natural expression of your sexuality in the bedroom. This is the place where we generally allow these feelings and this energy to take over. The problem is when our mind and body blocks and rejects these pleasant feelings both in the bedroom – which generates sexual dysfunctions – and in your own day-to-day life – which leads to repression, anxiety, restraint, psychosomatic diseases and mental and emotional issues.

In 95% of the cases, it's not a conscious choice to repress or restrain sexual energy, that's just the way our bodies and mind were taught to react to it, so we just do it without conscious awareness. We only deal with its consequences.

These sexual impulses control so much of what you do, how you act, and the choices you make; if they are not properly harnessed, they can lead to great destruction. But when they are properly harnessed and trained, great things can happen. By cultivating and learning how to handle this sexual energy you can, for example, express your sexuality in a much better and healthier way, you can avoid all kinds of frustrations and pathologies that come from the lack of control of your sexual energy and feel at ease with total control in social and flirting situations.

Many men have a complete lack of awareness regarding their sexual impulses and this creates feelings of anxiety when they are with women and suffer from all kinds of sexual dysfunctions like premature ejaculation, impotence, as well as not being able to deal with the normal everyday life frustrations. For this reason, it's crucial that we learn how to handle this energy.

Sexual energy tends to be a loose cannon in our society. It is present everywhere, regardless of where we turn. Our society is "hyper-sexualized". It's impossible to take a 10 minute walk downtown of any western city without seeing at least 100 different sexual photos, billboards or ads. This has a distinct effect on our bodily energy and especially on our sexual energy. We are going to generate much more of it. It will want to circulate inside of us faster and with more power than before. If we don't allow it, it will cause problems. Just like in traffic, imagine that you have triple the traffic then that for which the roads were prepared. You'll have traffic jams. It's what happens with sexual energy. More energy wants to circulate and it can only do so if we already have specially built high traffic highways, otherwise, if you only have a one lane road with a truck in front, it will quickly be congested.

So now, either our energy body adapts to these new demands, or all hell breaks loose, which is what continues to happen with a further increase in mental and physical health problems based on the somatization of these issues.

In summary, sexual energy is a powerful type of energy which shouldn't be neglected. Especially in today's western society we should understand and know how to deal with it so we aren't influenced by it in a negative way but can instead actually control it and use it to our own benefits and objectives.

Exercise - How to Feel Sexual Energy

Sexual energy is easily felt if you have a reasonable amount of bodily awareness. Just sit down comfortably with your eyes closed. Imagine any kind of sexual scene. Some simple visualization or a small scene or maybe searching your memories for a particularly good sexual encounter you had in the past. Anything will do as long as you start to feel sexual. Don't use any kind of "external help". Use only your mind. No videos or magazines.

Take your time until you feel the sexuality inside of you. Just notice what you feel inside of your body. Don't just go to the obvious genital area.

Feel the sexuality all over your body. Feel how it spreads all over you, throughout you. Get used to this feeling and allow it to circulate at will. Most of all, don't release it. Stay with it as long as you can. Spend at least 10 minutes experiencing this sexual feeling throughout your body, then get up and continue with your life.

Stay with this feeling as long as possible during your day. If it comes spontaneously, don't avoid it. Welcome this feeling of sexuality when it appears during your day. Don't avoid it and don't do anything to make it go away. Quite the opposite, welcome it and allow it to circulate freely.

With this exercise you are finally identifying what feeling sexual is all about. Most importantly, you are experiencing how it actually feels in your own body. But you can also run into some problems. By teaching it to a lot of different people over the years, I've had quite a few different reactions. You can find three major problems:

- 1) You are ashamed of doing this exercise due to deep sexual repression.

This shame can appear in several ways: by ridiculing the exercise, laughing, not being able to sit still, among others. All of these are reactions to being uncomfortable with sexuality, as well as feeling it, due to some past event. If you can't get over it yourself, then you'll require some individual sessions to heal the past experience.

2) You don't feeling anything. No sexuality, no bodily feelings whatsoever.

And in this case, it can be related to two problems: you have deep sexual blocks that stop you from feeling sexuality (deep trauma) or, the most likely cause is that you're not connected to your body and its feelings. In the Sexual Energy Mastery training course, we go over specific exercises for that.

3) Not being able to handle the feeling. It's too much and you have to release it in some form.

Many people don't know how to simply feel sexual and sexuality without releasing it through sex or masturbation or thinking about something else. And it's important that you are comfortable with this feeling at any time during your day so that you can use it in seduction and attraction. Just think about it, if you can't feel sexual or if you get out of your mind straight away, what message is it sending to your unconscious? "Sexuality is bad, I can't handle it; I don't want it". And how can you become a sexual magnetic person when your mind is being bombarded all the time with these unconscious messages? So accept the feeling and get used to it.

Chapter 9 - How to Project Personal Magnetism for Fun and Profit

The body of a magnetic person must have a different kind of training than that of an athlete. The most important trait is their ability to send energy to the outside world. They must transmit something. The cause to most un-magnetic energy in most people is monotony since it prevents the transmission of energy. If they are neutral or monotonous, if they constantly have the same actions, movements, thoughts, they are not magnetic. This is not related to doing the same things. When we say a person is monotonous, it usually means that this person does the same things over and over with no excitement in his/her life. But this is not exactly what it means in the sense of personal magnetism. If looking in from the outside, someone apparently lives a monotonous life, that doesn't mean that this person is monotonous and un-magnetic. Monotony, in the sense of personal magnetism, is about being flat and having no soul. You can recognize these people just by looking at them. They walk with no real spark, there's no life in their eyes and they talk with the same tone of voice, no excitement no variation. No one can be magnetic while they are like this.

This external monotony also comes from within, from being asleep, with no real attention to what's happening inside, with one's own thoughts, emotions and feelings nor outside, toward life and relationships, not to mention one's own behaviors. Here lies the problem. That's why in Charisma School we focus so very much on presence and awareness. It's the first step in awakening within yourself. If this awakening doesn't take place, all the other techniques and methods working on the external monotony and projection will not work either.

If the magnetism killer is monotony, this means that the biggest key to magnetism is enthusiasm and aliveness. And again, this enthusiasm has a meaning here that also differs from that which it has in the real world. We consider this enthusiasm not so much about excitement, but being happy. As important as these things are, we define the trait more along the lines of being alive, of having a spark, both internally and externally. You need to have it inside of yourself and then show it. This spark must first be created inside of yourself (with the other internal pillars on Inner Power, Will and Energy), and only then may it present itself to the external world. This is to say that only once the spark exists within can it cross to the outside world and teach your body how to be alive and enthusiastic since no one can teach it to you in an easy and methodical approach. If you weren't born this way, then you don't know how to be like this. Nobody taught your body how to move with aliveness and powerful movement, nor your voice to be deep and attractive or your gaze to have a spark. This is the work done in this pillar: to bring all of you from inside to the outside, alive and with soul!

For this purpose we use the training of the 7 Sources of Personal Magnetism. These are the things you have to train to be able to express this aliveness and magnetism in an efficient and powerful way. It's true that if you only develop the magnetism inside of you using the other pillars you'll already be able to project it somewhat. But it will never be in a way that truly stands out. For this, you need to teach your "organs of projection" how to exteriorize this energy.

The 7 Sources of Personal Magnetism are: Gaze, Voice, Touch, Movement, Personal Space and Thoughts/Feelings. Let's analyze them one by one.

Gaze: We all know the saying that the eyes are the window to our soul. And so they have the utmost importance in communication and magnetism. They can make someone fall in love, or make someone fear you. All with the eyes. In the next chapter we are going to talk more in depth about the Magnetic Gaze since it's a particular set of techniques and a whole new development.

Voice: As you know, the voice is one of our main vehicles of communication with other people. Although they say non-verbal communication is 90% of all communication, verbal communication, as well as the tone pitch and way we speak, are crucial for the projection of magnetism. I'm sure you've been in boring lectures (be it in school, work or social events), in which someone is always speaking with the same tone and pace and you just fall asleep on the spot. As you can imagine, that's not a magnetic person. A magnetic person can't allow this to happen. Someone with a magnetic voice actually brings people alive and creates interest in his/her speech. It's almost like a magical voice. There are people who go to great lengths to develop their voices, like many public speakers and actors. They need this for their line of work. You don't need the same kind of exercises and techniques they use, but similar ones with the full focus on having an alive voice, with a soul and color.

Touch: Although our western society is not fond of physical touch, depending on the culture, there will be more or less touch, but inevitably there will be touch, even if it's in the form of a handshake or initial greeting. And the more comfortable you are with a person, the more touching you usually experience. Between lovers, it's an important trait. In business meetings the same. You want your touch to transmit security, attractiveness, trust and a solid relationship. I'm sure you've met someone who either consciously or unconsciously gave you a good feeling just through an initial handshake.

Movement: Our movement is the way most people analyze and feel our personal magnetism. We are constantly moving, from the beginning to the end of our day and while we are with others so it transmits a lot more than we think. When our movement is weak and feebly, others consider us weak and feebly. If our movement is powerful, then others consider us powerful. There are certain traits that our movement simple must have to be magnetic. Our posture is also in this category.

Personal Space: It's the space outside of our body, usually around 1 meter (it can be more) to all sides of our bodies. Few people think much about this personal space, yet, it's of fundamental importance to our personal magnetism. This space, although not technically ours, can be considered ours and yet, many people walk in and out of it during the day. The good news is that we can influence this space easily and with it, the people inside of it. There are specific and concrete ways in which we can affect this space around us and fill it with our own energy, thus making it a source of personal magnetism.

Face: Our face is pretty much our brand, and its relation with personal magnetism is not about being beautiful or ugly, but more about it being magnetic or un-magnetic. An un-magnetic face is a monotonous face, a face that never moves or is always the same. A magnetic face is expressive and draws people to it. It complements our speech and the other sources of personal magnetism in a good way.

Thoughts/Feelings: You might be wondering why this is a source of personal magnetism since it's already been worked on in the previous pillars. Here, we use thoughts/feelings in a slightly different way. They are directly linked to what others feel about us. This is what results in the qualities of personal magnetism as described below.

The Qualities of Personal Magnetism

Not all personal magnetism and charisma is made the same. The energy you project through the Sources of Personal Magnetism determines the way people perceive and interact with you.

My personal magnetism is not the same as yours, since there are different qualities to it. Let's say we have three magnetic individuals: Bill Clinton, Dalai Lama and Scarlett Johansson. No one can deny that these three personalities are magnetic and influence a large number of people in different ways. Yet their personal magnetism is completely different.

Bill Clinton has a different kind of influence and attraction than that of the Dalai Lama or Scarlet Johansson. It's not worse nor better; nor even less or more influential. It's just different.

If we think about it, Bill Clinton was always considered friendly, down to earth, with a strong empathic style, a true communicator and politician. He is an icon for the power of communication and empathy. When people are talking with him, they just feel like they have his whole undivided attention.

The Dalai Lama, although he also has some of these qualities, stands out due to this own spiritual strength. Many people who meet him just feel a deep pull into their own spirituality. He influences people to go inside and think about their own spiritual roots, regardless of religion. He is an icon for true spiritual power and compassion.

And lastly Scarlett Johansson has a great sexual power. She has been considered the sexiest woman alive for several years by many magazines. She is constantly casted for roles where intense sexual magnetism is needed. Anyone who looks at her is bound to feel this sexual urge.

So each of these 3 personalities have their own specific personal magnetism, different from others, yet they are all influential and all magnetic. Please take these 3 personalities at face value. This is just an example to explain a concept. I have never personally met any of them, and so my assessment of their specific personal magnetism might not be 100% correct. If it helps, you can also think about your own examples of real life personal magnetism.

Now your main question might be why and how to cultivate a specific type of magnetism? Why does the Dalai Lama have a different type of personal magnetism and elicit different reactions from Bill Clinton or Scarlett Johansson? It might seem a silly question since all their personalities are clearly different and people's expectations when they meet them are naturally different. We can look at this phenomenon from several different perspectives and all of them have accurate answers, but let's look at it a bit more closely from the perspective of personal magnetism.

The Dalai Lama is the most obvious example since he has consciously and painstakingly trained his mind to become compassionate. Using Buddhist techniques of meditation and mind control he trained his mind to constantly emit compassionate energy, and due to this training, his personal magnetism is spiritual and compassionate. A big part, if not all, of his mind contents are turned toward compassion and spirituality. He has eliminated many of his own mind problems and toxicity. So his personal energy is infused with all the mind contents he cultivated. Each time he speaks, moves, touches someone, he is facing this interaction as a representation of what's happening in his mind, which is pure compassion and awareness. So his personal magnetism couldn't be of any other sort.

But most mind training isn't done quite so systematically and consciously by magnetic individuals. In most cases, they already have a mind that is naturally magnetic, with a certain quality (for example: empathy and communication for Bill Clinton). The quality of his mind is focused on how to establish great interactions; maybe it was due to both his biological father and stepfather being salesmen. And so his energy developed from an early age in a way that attracts others to him since his mind had a specific quality of magnetic communication.

Scarlett Johansson is similar, even though she is obviously endowed with beauty and other physical gifts. Her magnetism, unlike the Dalai Lama or Bill Clinton, is purely sexual magnetism, so is of a completely different quality. She is magnetic only in sexuality and not so much in compassion for example.

Even if she has the genetics of good looks, there are plenty of beautiful women who don't have sexual magnetism. There are plenty of beautiful women who don't elicit a powerful sexual reaction in those around them. Just think about your own situation, maybe at some point of your life you had a pure sexual attraction to someone who wasn't even the most beautiful woman you've been with or talked to. Vice-versa for a man.

Some people just elicit this kind of sexual quality of personal magnetism called sexual magnetism, and Scarlett Johansson is certainly one of them. She unconsciously trained her mind to accept, feel and seek sexuality. She feels comfortable in a sexual role and with sexual energy overall and so her mind has a sexual quality. I assume this was a similar development to Bill Clinton, and it was partially conscious work due to her profession and partially unconscious work since she already had some to begin with.

That's why there's the common myth that most charismatic people were born with charisma. In truth their mind was predisposed toward some aspect of personal magnetism more so than the overall population, and then, with some further development in projection, they became magnetic. But you won't necessarily need this mind predisposition as long as you train it to have the kind of quality you want to transmit (i.e. the Dalai Lama).

Above all, the quality of personal magnetism in those 3 people was transformed either consciously or unconsciously to be compassionate in the case of the Dalai Lama, empathic for Bill Clinton, and sexual for Scarlett Johansson. Then due to their work, they trained in projection, creating personal magnetism.

The projection and overall magnetism was only possible because her mind quality was already accustomed to sexual energy in the case of Scarlett Johansson, for example. If she hadn't accepted the feeling of sexual energy she had inside of her, if her mind wasn't unconsciously or consciously trained in sexuality, projection wouldn't be possible. Which seems only logical, yet many people still try to get the external techniques to work before they assume the necessary mind state for it. How can you project sexuality if you don't accept its effects and energy inside of yourself?

The first step is always to train your mind to have the quality that you want to transmit, to accept the kind of energy that you want to transmit. You can't become a sexual magnet capable of eliciting sexual reactions in everyone you come across if you first don't discover and accept your own sexual energy and your own feelings of sexual energy. Personal magnetism always starts inside of yourself. It starts in accepting and developing a quality in your mind of what you want to transmit.

If you don't know what the empathic state is, then how can you be empathic? Can you be empathic with yourself? Or sexual? Can you recognize accept and feel good in the feelings of sexuality inside of yourself? Sexually magnetic people do it unconsciously, but those of us who don't have this luxury of unconscious projection, have to learn it.

Only after you discover your own mind quality can you actually focus on projecting it. Once your mind has this quality, you can project it through gaze, speech, touch and movement as a natural consequence that can be easily trained.

With complete mastery of these 7 sources you know your personal magnetism improves. Just imagine someone with a powerful gaze who you can't stop looking at. A magnetic voice pleasing to the ear. A sense of touch through which you feel an impact and a distinct presence. When he moves, you feel an intention behind each movement, as well as a powerful vibration in his personal space and in whatever room he is in. His face his pleasing and suitable. His thoughts and feelings feel like a real entity that he creates.

That's a magnetic man and the goal of Charisma School for you.

Chapter 10 – The Magnetic Gaze That Attracts Anyone Anytime

The Magnetic Gaze is an ancient system with a set of techniques and practices that transforms your eyes into powerful communication and influence tools. It's a sub-system of the personal magnetism and charisma teachings you've been reading about in this book. The Magnetic Gaze is as much a personal trait of a magnetic person (having a powerful and expressive gaze) as a full system of esoteric development. Just by training it, you can achieve a dominant personal magnetism.

For a long time the eyes have been considered as the “window of the soul”. If we think carefully about it, we can realize how important the eyes are in communicating with others: you fall in love with people's eyes; you can see if a person is being honest or lying just through the eyes, you can see warmth in someone's eyes, you can see power and rage, and even despair. Communication is made, to a large extent, by the eyes.

But they can also be used for evil. The Italians have a word to describe the power of the eyes used for evil called “mallochio”, which literally means “bad eye”; In ancient times witches and warlocks developed their gaze with similar exercises to those you're about to learn, in a way that they could curse someone with the power of their eyes, hence the expression: “if looks could kill”.

In the old days, these Magnetic Gaze techniques were used by the travelling swamis to gather more followers and disciples. They would fascinate the followers in a way that they would leave everything just to follow the guru. In the old hermetic texts, there are reports of the magnetic gaze being used in ancient Egypt. In the West, this was also used by the snake oil salesmen, those travelling salesmen who sold the cure for everything. It was also used in the old royal courts by people who wished to be in the good graces of kings and princes, this is where the magnetic gaze started to get more attention, and hence the symbols starting to be used more frequently (like the Eye of the Illuminati).

The eye has been described as a small sized volcano: in most cases latent, quiet, sleeping but the center of the most intensely heated zone ready to glow when aroused. So these practices are a way to bring out and demonstrate the hidden energies of the body through the power of the eyes.

Benefits of the Magnetic Gaze

As a side effect of the development of the Magnetic Gaze you'll also develop a wonderful memory, stimulant thought, fertility of ideas and creativity, building inventive power, mental alertness as well as avoid mental breakdown. This practice can be a way to strengthen your own mind and develop abilities you never thought you had. If you follow through with this system you'll recognize that each accomplishment designed to awaken and arouse the latent magnetism of the body has a wide field of practical usefulness in all other directions other than the study of the magnetic gaze.

The first noticeable benefit of the Magnetic Gaze is to complement your communication skills. To achieve this you won't need to dive as deeply into the energy practices and teachings. Just by developing a part of your tension energy, by doing the eye and will exercises you'll notice these effects distinctively. Your personal magnetism increases, you become much more convincing and intense in your communication, others listen to you attentively and your gaze starts to stand out. This first level was taught by the early masters to door to door cheese salesmen so that they could sell more. They didn't care about energy development, personal magnetism, or having powerful eyes, they just wanted to sell more. And they achieved this with the first Magnetic Gaze level. This is enough to gain good enough levels of influence over others.

Now, to increase your ability to influence and inspire you need to deepen your energy and mind training. Only by using different qualities of energy can you give different qualities to your influence. For example attracting a partner can be done using a purely sexual energy, or a more romantic energy or a grounded and solid energy. The same goes for any kind of influence. You can't give different energy qualities with just the basic teachings.

The next level is using it to connect with others; your significant other, your family, your friends... Now that you already have powerful eyes, and you can naturally influence, you can also use the gaze to connect deeply with other people. It's a great tool to use if you just want to show everyone what you're feeling and to understand what they are feeling. The gaze is a pure and honest form of communication. This benefit requires the development of the soul of the eye and learning about your emotions. The eyes can reflect your emotions and you can see love, rage, lust, and many other emotions in someone's eyes. They can speak when nothing else speaks. If you are attentive and sensitive, you can get to know someone just from his or her eyes. The eyes can be quite revealing when you pay attention. When you first look at someone's eyes, in the first split second there's actually quite a deep and profound contact from which you get a "feeling" about this person (which can be good or bad depending on the person) and, in that moment, you can deeply know someone. But immediately after that first split second, your rational mind takes over and you immediately start labelling him or her according to your own mental stereotype, and so that profound contact is gone.

Contrary to popular belief, when using the Magnetic Gaze it will be harder to achieve this more profound connection than it will be to achieve normal everyday influence. Therefore we develop the power first and only afterwards can we develop the capacity for true and authentic connection.

Another more hidden and profound application is to connect to deeper layers of your being. This only happens when the Magnetic Gaze is fully interiorized in yourself, when it becomes a part of you. Only then can you begin to explore these more profound layers that have a deep impact on your whole self. You can access these layers through energy mastery and meditation. You can become aware, control and manipulate the energy currents of your body and use them for all sorts of practices and effects, both internal and external.

Our preferred way of meditation is called Tratak. This is an elaborate and intense practice that is only available in the advanced levels of the Magnetic Gaze. It's a practice which goes beyond influence and personal magnetism. Your eyes naturally have a different and much more profound effect on the outside once you start your Tratak practice.

How does it work?

Although the Magnetic Gaze seems like magic, it's far from it. Actually, the brain is the engine of the magnetic energy and the power you gain in the eyes. Let's take it one step at a time. First of all, there's a muscular training with the eyes, just like bodybuilding for your eyes. When you train your physical fitness, you do it to become stronger. It's the same here with your eyes. You are going to send them a large amount of energy and they will be required to work much more than they did before. It's only logical that you need this physical training. This is similar to if you always had a desk job, and you're now going to work in construction. Either you get physically ready or your body will suffer until it gets used to it.

Yet, there's more to it. Why do some people look at a random object or scenery and see a radically different thing than you or me? In fact, if I look at someone talking, most likely I'll see something and someone different than if you are looking and hearing the same person. Your brain handles what you see and how you see it. By training the different gaze types, you're not only doing the necessary physical fitness but your brain is learning new ways of using your eyes. Using your eyes not just unconsciously as you've been doing all your life, but in a whole new way. For example: there's a training to use your gaze as spies use theirs, learn to use it with full emotions behind, learn to use it in a powerful way and many others.

Then we have the development of your tension energy. It gives you the necessary charge, the necessary fuel, to gain all this power in your eyes. And, although we develop this tension energy via several different types of exercises, some people don't even need it. They already have it in its natural form. Although these people are rare, and most likely they wouldn't want to have the Magnetic Gaze training, even though it would bring their power to the next level.

This energy can be generated naturally, but it's not easy. With the exercises we are tapping into its natural reservoir and bringing it out. We are teaching your brain how to generate and use this energy in order to have a magnetic presence in your body. Most likely you've never felt this before, or if you did, it wasn't using all your awareness. With this training, you are able to understand the "magnetic feeling" in your body and you can channel it to your eyes through the different gaze types. It pulls the tension energy into your eyes making them magnetic.

Now how do you pull this energy to your eyes? I'm sure you've all heard the saying in all sorts of energy disciplines that says: "energy flows where your attention goes". As you train your attention, concentration, overall mental attitude and active state, it becomes easy to focus on where you want to focus, bringing this energy to where you want it.

Now you may ask me: "How about if you bring this energy into your voice? Would it create a magnetic voice?" And the answer is yes, naturally. The same way that you train your gaze types, you can follow a whole lot of other types of training for the voice, but the overall principle remains the same.

The Magnetic Gaze is nothing more than bringing your focused thoughts to the eyes and making them a vehicle for your own Will. It's easy to understand in principle but much harder to put into action. As you've seen you need physical development, energy development, Will development and mental development. But once all of these are in place, you'll have a powerful tool at your disposal.

We can compare the Magnetic Gaze to the driving experience. We can understand the gaze itself as the car, the moving vehicle that moves you from one place to the other. You can have a faster car, a slower car, a more beautiful or an ugly one, yet, it gets the job done. The car moves with fuel, without fuel the car just remains put. This fuel is the tension energy. It allows the car to move. Then you have the driver, which is your mind. This driver needs to train his reflexes and his awareness and a whole lot of cognitive skills so he doesn't bump into any other cars, can control the road ahead of him, is attentive to the road and so on. This is the mind and the mind training of skills like attention and state management. Then finally we have our Will, which is the direction: where do you want the car to take you? What's your ultimate purpose? This must be firmly established in your mind otherwise you may end up on the other side of town.

All these components work in a web of interrelations that connect everything in a perfect way. As long as all the components are there, you can't fail in developing a Magnetic Gaze. With my private students, if there's some problem in getting the Magnetic Gaze to work, I go one by one checking all the components until I understand where the problem is, and then it's easier to fix.

Exercise: Dot on the Wall

This is the more well-known exercise to develop the Magnetic Gaze.

Choose a small dot on a wall or print a circle with a dot in the middle and glue it to a wall about 1m ahead of you or 3 feet. The goal is to spend 3 to 5 minutes looking only at that dot without: 1) blinking 2) twitching the eyelids 3) moving your gaze elsewhere and with your eyes wide open (open your eyes completely, the more the better).

Remember, don't blink! If you blink you'll have to start all over. Keep your gaze fixed on that dot; don't look even an inch to the sides, it has to be precisely on that dot. Only this way you'll develop the powerful fixation look.

Some books say you'll have to reach an hour, but that's an exaggeration. It's hard to pass the 30 minute mark with that steady gaze and it's definitely not needed at this point since it can be hazardous for your eye health. At maximum, do it for 10 minutes and only once in a while (not on a daily basis). On a daily basis, no more than 3 to 5 minutes.

Exercise: Third Eye

The second exercise is called "Third Eye" and it's the sequel to the first exercise. It's also a way to become aware of your third eye.

Place a small mirror on the desk in front of you, or use a large mirror with the distance of about 1 meter. Gaze at your third eye as you did with the dot on the wall. Without blinking, no twitching, no eye movement and eyes wide open. Your third eye is the point between your eyebrows exactly at the root of your nose.

In the first couple of days you can use a pen to place a dot on your third eye if you prefer. But don't get used to this. Only use it for the first 2 or 3 days and only if you have any problems fixating the point.

Exercise: Power Gaze

This exercise intends to give you a powerful gaze. It fills your eyes with energy and gives them vitality.

As you sit down, close one eye tightly. As tight as possible. Make sure it's impossible to get that eye tenser or more closely shut. Make an effort. Keep it closed for at least 20 seconds.

Open that eye slowly and do the same with the other eye

Then with both eyes open and tensed, look hard at an object straight ahead of you. Put power behind that gaze. Stay there for at least 20 seconds.

With your head still and facing ahead, look at one corner of your eyes using that power gaze. Stay there a few seconds. Change to the other corner (keeping your head still). Do this with all corners of your eye. Don't overdo this exercise, once or twice a day is enough and only keep the power gaze for a few seconds (or 1 minute maximum).

Conclusion

Imagine that you've already developed all of the traits discussed in this book. You already have a spiritual quality and personal power bursting out of you so that everyone around you notices and admires you. You can already turn heads anywhere you go. You can have great communication abilities and a way to connect with those around you. And you can influence, attract and inspire anyone you chose to.

How would your life be different?

What would you achieve that you aren't achieving now?

In this book you were introduced to a path that allows you to achieve precisely this set of benefits and develop that "it" factor most people dream to achieve but never truly get to. It's not an easy path, but it's a path that can transform your whole life. You don't need to feel weak and feeble, without influence over your outside surroundings. You can change your mindset, inner power, energy, vitality and overall influence.

Regardless of the negative conditions of your life which brought you here, you can rest assured that you have a way out. You can consciously acknowledge and unleash the power of personal magnetism in a way that benefits your life.

Further Training

Charisma School offers online courses, live trainings and 1on1 coaching on the topics discussed throughout this book. For all the information please visit:

<http://www.charismaschool.com>

While we did our best to create this book as informative as possible, it's still not the right medium for a true personal magnetism and charisma training. The interaction is not there, and charisma must always be developed with others. That's why all our online courses include full email support and guiding by a competent trainer. Due to the nature of personal magnetism, none of the courses can be completed successfully without the aid of a trainer who can adapt the course curriculum to your specific needs according to your progress. Different students have different needs. Up to date we've found that some changes always had to be made with all those who successfully completed the courses.

At the time of this writing (late 2015), there are 9 available online training courses and three in preparation:

- 10 Steps to Inner Power (Level 1): This is the foundational course to achieve the internal building blocks of Charisma: Inner Power and Will, both in the relation with yourself and the relation with others. It's a very practical course with 95% of the exercises being missions to be done with people in your everyday life to change your behaviors where most needed.
- Personal Magnetism (Level 2): The next level of the charisma training which develops the 7 Sources of Personal Magnetism: Gaze, Voice, Touch, Movement, Personal Space, Thoughts/Feelings. You develop a magnetic voice, mastery of your personal space, magnetic touch, external vibrations and so on. You can change the way you walk, talk, move, touch to having a magnetic and stronger impact on others.

- Magnetic Gaze Level 1, 2, 3: The 3 initial levels of the Magnetic Gaze explore the energy development and projection using your eyes. You train your eyes, breathing, energy, concentration and so on. This way, you'll be able to transform your eyes into powerful tools to influence, attract and inspire others.
- Sexual Energy Mastery: This is our most important and groundbreaking program to discover and release the sexual energy you have inside of yourself in a way that transforms you into a naturally sexual person who elicits sexual reactions in all those around you. No projections, no techniques, just a pure increase of sexual energy.
- Sexual Magnetism: This course is designed to transform you into a sexually magnetic person, capable of attracting and seducing any woman. With it, you'll learn how to appeal to a woman's unconscious mind with the development and use of sexual energy. Put aside all the patterns, routines, jokes, and start to get women naturally attracted to you.
- Vitality and Energy Training: This training goes in depth into the development of your energy in general. It's the perfect course for those who need a sure fire way to learn how to handle energy in their body, as well as developing a good amount of vitality. You learn how to handle two types of Tension Energy, and techniques for "resetting" your energy body to the type of energy that suits you best. Increasing your vitality and optimizing the energy flow in your body is the main objective of this training.

- Magnetic Interactions: This is a smaller training course with the goal of improving your conversation and interaction skills. Not only do you learn how to easily develop empathy and rapport, but you also focus on having interactions with meaning in a way that allows you to always establish great connections with those around you.

In preparation:

- Charisma (Level 3)
- Magnetic Gaze Level 4
- Concentration

1on1 Training

The 1on1 Training is the fastest and most efficient way to develop Charisma, Personal Magnetism, Magnetic Gaze or Sexual Energy. Since it's an individual training, we can spot your problem areas and, since we've worked with many clients just like you, we can gently recommend strategies to help you overcome them...skyrocketing your success. While if you try to do the same alone, you can certainly do it, but it will take you 4 times as much time to spot the mistake and correct it. This is not exclusive to charisma. It's the same with whatever area you choose to work with from singing, to sports to hairdressers.

In most cases, we convince ourselves that we can do it alone even though we may have been struggling for months or years with the same problems instead of just asking for an extra boost from someone who's spent his life solving the same problems we have.

It involves two monthly 60 minutes phone sessions, with email access between sessions. It gives you full support to radically transform your personal charisma. This will be an extreme makeover of your charismatic self. We have enough time to work on your charismatic blocks, to go deep into each Charisma Pillar and develop your charisma levels to your maximum degree. These sessions involve deep inner work, so only subscribe if you are ready for it. This is the most in depth training on Charisma currently available on the market.

Everything is done by phone so you can do it in the comfort of your own home. No need to give up your friends, family, work or hobbies to travel to distant lands to costly seminars, boot camps or consultations – instead, expand your existing life exactly where you are, right now, with the powerful training methods of Charisma School.

Appendix: Methods and Techniques of Charisma School

Most likely, you are tired of disorganized and unsystematic ways of personal development that teach you some techniques and then send you on your way. This approach is unlikely to work for most people in a consistent way. Therefore, when we decided to create a training program for personal magnetism and charisma, we also created - and refined - a unique and efficient method that we - very originally - named Charisma School Method (CSM) a systematic way for development of your inner power and charisma that stands out on its own. A set of principles and processes you can adapt and use, filled with techniques and tools that are carefully placed together in a concrete step by step system.

The CSM is a systematic procedure by which we achieve our objective. It's how every tool and technique fits together in an integrated step by step system that has the sole objective of making you magnetic. Our method uses a series of tools and techniques from different sources in a systematic way to make sure they all fit together at the different stages of your development. Some tools and technique will not be appropriate to use at the beginning of your development, nor will some tools that you'll use at the beginning be appropriate to use at more advanced stages. Some of them are similar to training wheels which you use in the early stages, but which you then outgrow. Other tools are like barometers and you only use them to measure your achievements. So they have different functions and timelines. The CSM is what defines the timeline and integrates the tools and techniques in the overall scheme of things.

With this approach, the training of charisma and personal magnetism is divided into smaller more manageable pieces that have a precedent relationship among them. In other words, you would only start the next step after you complete a series of exercises and achievements. Construction projects represent another example in which the work is carefully divided into stages with precedent relationships. You don't start building a house from the roof. You start by laying out the foundations and building on top of them, step by step.

After the method was determined, we defined the tools and techniques. Techniques represent ways for performing specific tasks (“how to”). A variety of techniques are used in our CSM for many different things. Obviously, it would be counter-productive to use a technique at the wrong time. This means the effective use of the technique is dependent upon the CSM.

The tools implement the techniques. They provide a mechanical leverage for performing a specific task. In this sense, it’s an extension of a technique, and like the technique, tools must be deployed at the proper locations at the appropriate times. That’s why many tools have often failed you in the past, not because the tools were bad, but simply because there wasn’t a method which integrated all of them into a complete system that defined when the techniques and tools were to be used.

You can think about these seemingly abstract concepts using a simple example: changing a tire. You have created a method to change a tire: first you place your car in a break position; you have to get your spare tire and jack; you have to raise the jack until it’s supporting the car, then remove the hub cap and so on. In this case, our tools would be the jack, a wrench and others. The technique would be the way in which you would raise the jack until it’s supporting the car: there can be many different techniques to achieve the same effect. You can be standing up, lying down, sitting down, more strength, less strength and so on. Therefore, the method is how we organize the complete system of changing the tire, the techniques we use for the different steps would be defined by the method and the tools we use by the techniques. The method defines the techniques and the techniques define the tools. We have our method (a system to put everything together to achieve a specific result), our techniques (how we do things) and tools (the mechanical leverage to perform a task).

Our method follows a set of principles, some key characteristics, which are essential elements that distinguish this method from others. You can say that there are some guidelines which we follow to put things into practice. There are 7 Basic Operating Principles (7BOP) of the CSM. These are the principles used in all of our training. They are not unique to this method. You can choose to apply these principles in everything in your life you need to master, since all your endeavors will become fruitful and efficient by using the 7BOP.

1. Action: The first principle is deceptively simple: taking action. At this point in time, it seems fairly redundant to add this to the 7BOP, but it must be present in any training program. You have to physically move your body and mind towards what you want. Nothing really happens until you do that. Very often we avoid taking action for the things we need in life. Many of us think we need to have motivation, inspiration, warm and fuzzy feelings before we can do something. Far from it. First take action, then search for these feelings. It's a mistake to wait for inspiration or motivation or the calling of the muse, since they may never come. Action must be taken with or without motivation and inspiration.

As you've read in the other chapters, inner work is a cornerstone of our training but if it's not accompanied by action in the external world, it doesn't mean anything. You can visualize your success until you are blue in the face, but this means very little if there's no action in the real world, outside of your mind. Inner work is not a replacement for action, it's a complement. One problem is when we often cheat ourselves and do all kinds of inner work just to avoid taking action. But it's important to keep in mind that an idea, a thought, of and by itself has no intrinsic value. It must always be accompanied by action.

This is one of the most important principles of Charisma School and that's why in our courses, we always stress action in the real world and not just in your head, with practical exercises involving others and real world activities. What good can come from an illusory self-confidence which only exists in your brain? When you need it the most, which is when you're presenting a speech or when you're in a job interview, the confidence disappears while the anxiety rises? When we want the inner power is precisely in these key moments, not only when you are home alone saying affirmations and visualizing success. It won't do you any good if you are as confident as a lion in front of the mirror, but then in the real world you back down like a chicken.

2. Kaizen: This commonly refers to the philosophy or practices that focus upon continuous improvement. In Japanese, the definition of Kaizen is "improvement" and particularly "continuous Improvement" - slow, incremental but constant. This principle is most commonly used in the business and management world referring to production.

There are two parts to this principle:

The first complements the action principle. Not only must you take action, but the action must be consistent, every day, or how often you need it. Very rarely you achieve something by doing it only once. You don't win an Olympic medal just for showing up on the day of your competition, you win an Olympic medal because you showed up every day for years to your training ground. And this is precisely what we advocate in Charisma School. Constant and solid practice of whatever you need to master over the necessary period of time you need until you achieve your results. We are not advocating rapid quantum leaps since those are often the result of a long time of constant practice.

George Leonard (1992) describes the process of mastery as a slow process, with most of your time spent in plateaus. In other words, you spent most of your time training and working but nothing visible seems to happen, until suddenly a quantum leap happens. You can feel it, you can see it and you just attained a whole new level of mastery. But then comes the plateau again and the cycle repeats itself. Whether you like it or not that's how it works. If you've mastered any skill in your life, you'll be able to identify this process.

The second part is doing deliberate practice focused on improvement. Not only is it important to have consistent action but you must also consciously engage in your practice with the specific goal of improving performance. The Kaizen principle means improvement, so you won't reach your best self if all you do is consistently and repetitively take the same actions everyday just for the sake of doing it. Far from it. Your actions must be conscious and should have the goal of improving your performance in the skill you are currently working on. Deliberate practice is different from work, play and simple repetition of a task. It requires effort and it is not inherently enjoyable. It's a constant sense of self-evaluation, of focusing on one's weaknesses and careful self-evaluation, rather than simply fooling around and playing to one's strengths. A teacher, coach, guide or trainer is fundamental to make sure you don't lose yourself.

For this principle, the essential summary to retain is the importance of consistent action, focused on improvement, and not just repeating the same movement or exercise blindly.

3. Synergy: You can define synergy as two or more elements working together to produce a result they couldn't obtain individually ($1+1 = 3$). And this is often the case with many of our techniques and tools. They are powerful by themselves but when you join several of them together, you get an even greater result. That's why we advocate small combinations of specific techniques and tools, that may apparently serve different purposes, yet they are a perfect synergistic combination that improves your overall result.

For example, we often recommend different exercises for strengthening your Will. However, when you join them with an activity that forces you to expand your social barriers and influence people in your everyday life – not home alone – then, this training gets an even greater result, since not only do you do the same exercises for training your social influence, you are increasing your Will at the same time, taking advantage of the synergistic training between both set of exercises. The combination of tools and techniques, even if with different purposes, must be taken into account if we want excellent results.

4. Incremental Stress: This is a common principle in bodybuilding and strength training, where it's called progressive overload. In those situations, in order to achieve new results in your training, as opposed to maintaining some current strength capacity, the muscles need to be overloaded, which stimulates the natural adaptive processes of the human body, which in turn develops to cope with the new demands placed on it. The adaptive processes of the human body will only respond if continually called upon to exert a great magnitude of force to meet higher physiological demands. In other words, to get bigger and stronger you must continually lift more and more and make your muscles work harder than they are used to. If you don't, your muscles will not become any stronger or bigger than they currently are.

In Charisma School it works the same way. In order to increase your power, you also have to increase the demands you put into it every single time. If you just use it at the same level every time, then it never grows. Therefore, you start a few degrees out of your comfort zone while gradually increasing the difficulty. Very soon, you'll be able to look back and see how far ahead you have come.

You use the incremental stress principle in order to increase the amount of stress you can tolerate. It doesn't matter how little or how much you start out with, you can increase it to high levels following this principle. Perhaps in the beginning stages it'll be hard for you to talk with a superior, but once the training starts, after a few months, you could be taking to him and asking him for favors. It can all be done, regardless of how far out of reality it might seem to be at this moment.

We also use the natural difficulties that arise in the course of normal everyday life. Difficulties are like challenges to our intelligence and work as a barometer to see how ready we are. They enable us to grow and make progress in our practice. Viewed in this way, it's extremely useful for us to be challenged by someone, to encounter a block in our path, to have a profound fear – in fact, it's one of the best things that can happen to us. If we only rest in peace and quiet, we cannot see what it is that we still have to develop. We may think that we are calm, powerful and confident, but we will only discover if we really are so, when we run into difficulties. Everyone is calm and peaceful when there are no challenges or difficulties. It's the difficult situations that show us what our practice is worth.

Pride can easily creep in and we may regard ourselves as highly fulfilled and confident individuals. But the moment a small conflict arises, we feel miserable and become aggressive, or we act unworthy of someone with a high degree of inner power. At that point we face reality and the truth about ourselves. In fact, it would be a good thing if every day we were to experience a small conflict to bring us down to earth. Only then can we see the true value of our training.

5. Responsibility: We live in an age in which it's never our fault, nor our responsibility for anything. The government ruined our life conditions, our parents screwed up our mind and the corporations ruined our health. It doesn't matter if we entered into debt to get a new car, or if we ate junk food every day to save time. None of this matters because it's not our fault.

In Charisma School, we have a different outlook. We feel everyone should take responsibility for their own life and personality conditions. In fact, you have much more control over your life, your emotions and your power that you are aware of. Most people were taught that things just happen, and we have to make the best out of them. This may be the case in some random life situations, but in the overall majority of situations, it's pretty much our responsibility.

As we discussed in the chapter on inner power, there are many factors involved that can drain you of inner power, but above all, these factors can be avoided by you. You can overrun them, thus taking them into your sphere of responsibility.

Of course, there are truly random life situations that are outside of our scope of responsibility. But these are far and in between, without drastically affecting you on a daily basis (exceptions may happen). It's a very important skill to recognize the difference between truly random events – that you had absolutely no control of – and those that you ultimately caused yourself. Above all, we have no one to blame for our current state of being other than ourselves.

Sometimes, a single decision, an event that went against your better judgement, and worse, went against your past experience of similar situations, and provided the dynamic series of conditions that got you into the situation you are in now. All of this could have been avoided by simply relying upon your past experience in similar situations and by exercising control over your emotions, and not allowing them to override your own experience.

In Charisma School we teach: Take responsibility for your decisions and actions – or non-actions or non-decisions – and stop dabbling in the comfortable state of guilt which affords you the cozy feeling of being a victim. You'll be surprised at how quickly you will reach a vastly superior level of self-confidence and inner power, while achieving a justified feeling of greater control over your own life.

6. Scientific Testing: Our method follows the scientific guidelines for creating valid results. First we learn the theory, then create a hypothesis and then experiment with this hypothesis to see if it creates the results we are after. This experimental evidence is what makes all of the observations and answers valid or confirmed. The history of evidence and validations show that the original statements were correct and accurate. We did this for all the steps in our method.

Never take any teachings for granted and don't believe in anything at face value. Unlike other schools, we encourage you to try everything out for yourself and only keep doing the things that really work for you. It's not a rational behavior if you keep doing things that are bad for you or don't work or don't provide any results. Hence, we encourage everyone to try our methods, give them a fair trial, test them and make your best effort to put them to work for you. We call this a testing phase. A testing phase is a fair period of time to experiment with some method, tool or technique, designed to reach a conclusion of their validity for your personal experience. At the end of this testing phase, you'll reach a conclusion of whether this technique, method or tool is useful to you or not.

This testing phase is the perfect playground to experiment with the technique just as it comes, and to play with it and see what works best for you. Some of the techniques might not work "straight out of the box". It's important to adjust them in a way that works for you.

Any of the techniques, if they help you become more confident, assertive, charismatic, to have a strong inner power that will last you a lifetime, should be worth a testing phase, since they're something that you'll be able to use for all your life? Use this strict testing phase in which you experiment with the tools and techniques we provide, adjust them to fit your mind, personality and life, and, in the end, decide if you want to keep using them or not.

One important tip: never quit your testing phase because of laziness, procrastination or fear. If you do, you'll be better off not having tried anything in the first place, than trying and quitting due to one of these things. As you will be able to learn in our training, we are very rigorous in doing the things you say you were going to, when you were going to do them and how you were going to do them. Your word and commitments are one of the main inner power principles. So when you decide to have a testing phase of a particular method, tool or technique, really do it.

7. Huna Principle: There's an old Huna principle that was given by a shaman to his people when he wanted to help them live a happy life:

"If you do something and after having done it you feel better (again, better can be anything good for you - refreshed, reinvigorated, energized, powerful - as long as those are feelings and symptoms you want to have) then you can and should do it again. If after having done something, instead, you feel worse, then don't do that something anymore"

You may be thinking to yourself how obvious this principle is. And yes it is. It's something that if said out loud, will leave most people just staring at you blankly. Yet, I decided to write it here anyway. Why? Think about it... how many people, including you and me, actually follow it?

How many people lead miserable lives from not following this principle? How many people work in a job they hate, for a boss they want to kill, or are married to someone they hate and despise. Or even pursue a career path they don't like. All of this happens because of people's fear of getting out their comfort zone and going to conquer what they want (remember the incremental stress principle?).

And of course this is easier said than done. It's very easy to conform ourselves to a miserable life like many people have. Sometimes, it's much harder to refuse to stay in a situation which is harmful for us for many different reasons. Yet, actually doing it is worth much more than you can imagine at this moment. Refuse to be in this kind of harmful situation no matter what.

In life, you have to make choices and these choices determine the life you have. By refusing to settle in a situation that, deep inside, you know is bad for you, you gain more charisma and more confidence than everything else put together. While if you stay in this kind of situation you will never become a magnetic person regardless of how many exercises you do. How could you be a confident and charismatic person if you are doing something you hate all day? Or putting up with people you despise, just because you don't have the courage to say "get away from me"? Or regularly eating junk food knowing full well the health consequences?

Wouldn't it feel better to actually quit eating junk food that only makes you feel worse or to be able to quit your dead end job or do whatever you need to do, regardless of how hard it is? This Huna principle can be applied to anything in life. Even the simpler things. There's more to this principle than what meets the eye, think about it and don't approach it only at face value.

Summary

You've just been introduced to the 7BOP, which is what we use to design our trainings. As you could understand, everything has a purpose and all of them are used to become the best we can be. All these 7 principles could be summed up in one sentence:

You achieve your goal by consistent and deliberate action in a synergistic way, taking full responsibility, constantly testing and incrementing difficulties, which provide good results and a long lasting well-being.

We understand that in the age of quick fixes and instant results, this is not the most appealing set of principles. But we didn't choose these principles because of their appeal. We chose them because of their effectiveness. These are time and tested and have been used since the beginning of times. We want to provide you with results; we want you to reach your goal of establishing inner power, confidence, self-esteem, charisma and achieve whatever you want out of life and we believe this set of principles is the most likely road to take you there. We don't believe in quick-fixes or instant changes, we believe in the value of hard work and personal responsibility. Only in this way will you achieve true mastery over yourself and your own inner power and charisma.
